* MEASURE FOR MEASURE.] The story is taken from Cinthio's Novels, Decad. 8. Novel 5. POPE.

We are sent to Cinthio for the plot of Measure for Measure, and Shakspeare's judgment hath been attacked for some deviations from him in the conduct of it, when probably all he knew of the matter was from Madam Isabella, in The Heptameron of Whetstone, Lond. 4to, 1582. — She reports, in the fourth dayes Exercise, the rare Historie of Promos and Cassandra. A marginal note informs us, that Whetstone was the author of the Comedie on that subject; which likewise had probably fallen into the hands of Shakspeare.

FARMER.

There is perhaps not one of Shakspeare's plays more darkened than this by the peculiarities of its author, and the unskilfulness of its editors, by distortions of phrase, or negligence of transcription.

JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson's remark is so just respecting the corruptions of this play, that I shall not attempt much reformation in its metre, which is too often rough, redundant, and irregular. Additions and omissions (however trifling) cannot be made without constant notice of them; and such notices, in the present instance, would so frequently occur, as to become equally tiresome to the commentator and the reader.

Shakspeare took the fable of this play from the Promos and Cassandra of George Whetstone, published in 1578. See Theobald's note at the end.

A hint, like a seed, is more or less prolific, according to the qualities of the soil on which it is thrown. This story, which in the hands of Whetstone produced little more than barren insipidity, under the culture of Shakspeare became fertile of entertainment. The curious reader will find that the old play of Promos and Cassandra exhibits an almost complete embryo of Measure for Measure; yet the hints on which it is formed are so slight, that it is nearly as impossible to detect them, as it is to point out in the acorn the future ramifications of the oak.

Whetstone opens his play thus:

Act I. Scene i.

“ Promos, Mayor, Shirife, Sworde bearer: one with a bunche of keyes: Phallax, Promos Man.

“ You officers which now in Julio staye,

“ Know you your leadge, the King of Hungarie,

“ Sent me to Promos, to joyne with you in sway:

“ That styll we may to Justice have an eye.

" And now to shew my rule and power at lardge,
" Attentivelie his letters patents heare:
" Phallax, reade out my Soveraines chardge.

Phal. " As you commaunde I wyll: give heedeful eare.

Phallax readeth the Kinges Letters Pattents, which must be fayre written in parchment, with some great counterfeat zeale.

Pro. " Loe, here you see what is our Soveraignes wyl,
" Loe, heare his wish, that right, not might, beare fwaye:
" Loe, heare his care, to weede from good the yll,
" To scourge the wights, good lawes that disobay.
" Such zeale he beares, unto the common weale,
" (How so he byds, the ignoraunt to save)
" As he commaundes, the lewde doo rigor feele, &c. &c. &c.

Pro. " Both swoorde and keies, unto my princes use,
" I do receyve, and gladlie take my chardge.
" It resteth now, for to reforme abuse,
" We poynt a tyme of councell more at lardge,
" To treat of which, a whyle we wyll depart.

Al. speake. " To worke your wyll, we yeelde a willing hart.

Exeunt.

The reader will find the argument of G. Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, at the end of this play. It is too bulky to be inserted here. See likewise the piece itself among Six old Plays on which Shakspeare founded, &c. published by S. Leacroft, Charing-crofs. STEEVENS.

Measure for Measure was, I believe, written in 1603. See An Attempt to ascertain the Order of Shakspeare's Plays, Vol. II.

A C T I. S C E N E I.

An apartment in the Duke's palace.

Enter DUKE, ESCALUS, Lords, and Attendants.

DUKE. Escalus, —

ESCAL. My lord.

DUKE. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;
Since I am put to know, <sup>2</sup> that your own science,
Exceeds, in that, the lists <sup>3</sup> of all advice

<sup>2</sup> Since I am put to know, ] may mean, I am compelled to acknowledge.

So, in King Henry VI. P. II. sc. i:

“ — had I first been put to speak my mind. ”

Again, in Drayton's Legend of Pierce Gaveston:

“ My limbs were put to travel day and night. ”

STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — lists — ] Bounds, limits. JOHNSON.

So, in Othello:

“ Confine yourself within a patient list. ”

Again, in Hamlet:

“ The ocean, over-peering of his list, ” —

STEEVENS.

My strength can give you: Then no more remains,
But that to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them work.<sup>4</sup> The nature of our people,

<sup>4</sup> ——— Then no more remains,

But that to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,

And let them work.] To the integrity of this reading Mr.

Theobald objects, and says, What was Escalus to put to his sufficiency? why, his science: But his science and sufficiency were but one and the same thing. On what then does the relative them depend? He will have it, therefore, that a line has been accidentally dropp'd, which he attempts to restore thus:

But that to your sufficiency you add

Due diligence, as your worth is able, &c.

Nodum in scirpo quærit. And all for want of knowing, that by sufficiency is meant authority, the power delegated by the duke to Escalus. The plain meaning of the word being this: Put your skill in governing, (says the Duke) to the power which I give you to exercise it, and let them work together. WARBURTON.

Sir Thomas Hanmer having caught from Mr. Theobald a hint that a line was lost, endeavours to supply it thus:

——— Then no more remains,

But that to your sufficiency you join

A will to serve us, as your worth is able.

He has, by this bold conjecture, undoubtely obtained a meaning, but, perhaps, not even in his own opinion, the meaning of Shakspeare.

That the passage is more or less corrupt, I believe every reader will agree with the editors. I am not convinced that a line is lost, as Mr. Theobald conjectures, nor that the change of but to put, which Dr. Warburton has admitted after some other editor, [Rowe] will amend the fault. There was probably some original obscurity in the expression, which gave occasion to mistake in repetition or transcription. I therefore suspect that the author wrote thus:

——— Then no more remains,

But that to your sufficiencies your worth is abled,

And let them work.

Then nothing remains more than to tell you, that your virtue is now invested with power equal to your knowledge and wisdom. Let therefore your knowledge and your virtue now work together. It may easily be conceived how sufficiencies was, by an inarticulate speaker, or inattentive hearer, confounded with sufficiency as, and how abled, a word very unusual, was changed into able. For abled, however, an authority is not wanting. Lear uses it in the same sense, or nearly the same with the Duke. As for sufficiencies, D. Hamilton in his dying speech, prays that Charles II. may exceed both the virtues and sufficiencies of his father. JOHNSON.

Our city's institutions, and the terms'

The uncommon redundancy, as well as obscurity, of this verse may be considered as evidence of its corruption. Take away the two first words, and the sense joins well enough with what went before. Then (says the Duke) no more remains to say:

*Your sufficiency as your worth is able,

i. e. Your skill in government is, in ability to serve me, equal to the integrity of your heart, and let them co-operate in your future ministry.

The verification requires that either something should be added, or something retrenched. The latter is the easier, as well as the safer task. I join in the belief, however, that a line is lost; and whoever is acquainted with the inaccuracy of the folio, (for of this play there is no other old edition,) will find my opinion justified.

STEEVENS.

Some words seem to be lost here, the sense of which, perhaps, may be thus supplied:

—— *then no more remains,
But that to your sufficiency you put
A zeal as willing as your worth is able,
And let them work.* ——— TYRWHITT.

I agree with Warburton in thinking that by sufficiency the duke means authority, or power; and, if that be admitted, a very slight alteration indeed will restore this passage—the changing the word is into be. It will then run thus, and be clearly intelligible:

—— *Then no more remains,
But that your sufficiency, as your worth, be able,
And let them work.*

That is, you are thoroughly acquainted with your duty, so that nothing more is necessary to be done, but to invest you with power equal to your abilities. M. MASON.

—— *Then no more remains,
But that to your sufficiency ** as your worth is able,
And let them work.*

I have not the smallest doubt that the compositor's eye glanced from the middle of the second of these lines to that under it in the MS. and that by this means two half lines have been omitted. The very same error may be found in Macbeth, edit. 1632:

For common justice, you are as pregnant in,<sup>6</sup>
As art and practice hath enriched any

" ——— which, being taught, return,
" To plague the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
" To our own lips."

instead of

" ——— which, being taught, return,
" To plague the inventor. This even-handed justice
" Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice," &c.

Again, in Much ado about Nothing, edit. 1623, p. 103:

" And I will break with her. Was't not to this end," &c.

" And I will break with her, and with her father,
" And thou shalt have her. Was't not to this end," &c.

The following passage, in King Henry IV. P. I. which is constructed in a manner somewhat similar to the present when corrected, appears to me to strengthen the supposition that two half lines have been lost:

" Send danger from the east unto the west,
" So honour cross it from the north to south,
" And let them grapple."

Sufficiency is skill in government; ability to execute his office.
And let them work, a figurative expression; let them ferment.

MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> ——— the terms — ] Terms mean the technical language of the courts. An old book called Les Termes de la Ley, (written in Henry the Eighth's time) was in Shakspeare's days, and is now, the accidence of young students in the law. BLACKSTONE.

For common justice, you are as pregnant in, ] The later editions all give it, without authority,

———— the terms

Of justice, ———

and Dr. Warburton makes terms signify bounds or limits. I rather think the Duke meant to say, that Escalus was pregnant, that is ready and knowing in all the forms of the law, and, among other things, in the terms or times set apart for its administration.

JOHNSON.

The word pregnant is used with this signification in Ram-Alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611, where a lawyer is represented reading:

" In tricesimo primo Alberti Magni —
" 'Tis very cleare — the place is very pregnant."

i. e. very expressive, ready, or very big with apposite meaning.

Again,

" ——— the proof is most pregnant." STEEVENS.

That we remember: There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. — Call hither,

I say, bid come before us Angelo. —

[Exit an Attendant.]

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply;<sup>7</sup>
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love;
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power: What think you of it?

ESCAL. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is lord Angelo.

Enter ANGELO.

DUKE. Look, where he comes.

ANG. Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

<sup>7</sup> For you must know, we have with special soul Elected him our absence to supply;] By the words with special soul elected him, I believe, the poet meant no more than that he was the immediate choice of his heart.

A similar expression occurs in Troilus and Cressida:

" — with private soul,

" Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me."

Again, more appositely, in The Tempest:

" — for several virtues

" Have I lik'd several women, never any

" With so full soul, but some defect," &c. STEEVENS.

Steevens has hit upon the true explanation of the passage; and might have found a further confirmation of it in Troilus and Cressida, where, speaking of himself, Troilus says,

" — ne'er did young man fancy

" With so eternal, and so fix'd a soul."

To do a thing with all one's soul, is a common expression:

M. MASON.

DUKE.

Angelo,

There is a kind of character in thy life,
 That, to the observer,<sup>8</sup> doth thy history
 Fully unfold: Thyself and thy belongings<sup>9</sup>
 Are not thine own so proper,<sup>2</sup> as to waste
 Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.<sup>3</sup>
 Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do;

—— we have with special soul ——] This seems to be only a translation of the usual formal words inserted in all royal grants: —
 “De gratia nostra speciali, et ex mero motu ——.” MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> *There is a kind of character in thy life,
 That, to the observer, &c.*] Either this introduction has more solemnity than meaning, or it has a meaning which I cannot discover. What is there peculiar in this, that man's life informs the observer of his history? Might it be supposed that Shakspeare wrote this?

There is a kind of character in thy look.

History may be taken in a more diffuse and licentious meaning, for future occurrences, or the part of life yet to come. If this sense be received, the passage is clear and proper. JOHNSON.

Shakspeare must, I believe, be answerable for the unnecessary pomp of this introduction. He has the same thought in Henry IV. P. II. which affords some comment on this passage before us:

“ There is a history in all men's lives,
 “ Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd:
 “ The which observ'd, a man may prophecy
 “ With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 “ As yet not come to life,” &c. STEEVENS.

On considering this passage, I am induced to think that the words character and history have been misplaced, and that it was originally written thus:

*There is a kind of history in thy life,
 That to the observer doth thy character
 Fully unfold.*

This transposition seems to be justified by the passage quoted by Steevens from the Second Part of Henry IV. M. MASON.

<sup>3</sup> —— them on thee.] The old copy reads — they on thee. The emendation was made by Sir T. Hanmer. STEEVENS.

Not light them for themselves : for if our virtues <sup>4</sup>
 Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
 As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd,
 But to fine issues : <sup>5</sup> nor nature never lends <sup>6</sup>
 The smallest scruple of her excellence,
 But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines
 Herself the glory of a creditor,
 Both thanks and use. <sup>7</sup> But I do bend my speech
 To one that can my part in him advertise ; <sup>8</sup>

<sup>4</sup> ——— for if our virtues, &c.]

“ Celata virtus.” ——— HOR. THEOBALD.

Again, in Massinger's Maid of Honour :

“ Virtue, if not in action, is a vice,

“ And when we move not forward, we go backward.”

Thus, in the Latin adage — Non progredi est regredi. STEEVENS.

So, in Julius Cæsar :

“ There is no harm intended to your person,

“ Nor to no Roman else.” STEEVENS.

Herself the glory of a creditor,

Both thanks and use.] i. e. She (Nature) requires and allots to herself the same advantages that creditors usually enjoy, — thanks for the endowments she has bestowed, and extraordinary exertions in those whom she hath thus favoured, by way of interest for what she has lent.

Use in the phraseology of our author's age, signified interest of money. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> ——— I do bend my speech,

To one that can my part in him advertise ;] This is obscure. The meaning is, I direct my speech to one who is able to teach me how to govern ; my part in him, signifying my office, which I have delegated to him. My part in him advertise ; i. e. who knows what appertains to the character of a deputy or viceroy. Can advertise my part in him ; that is, his representation of my person. But all these quaintnesses of expression, the Oxford editor seems

Hold therefore, Angelo ;<sup>9</sup>
 In our remove, be thou at full ourself ;
 Mortality and mercy in Vienna
 Live in thy tongue and heart: Old Escalus,
 Though first in question,<sup>2</sup> is thy secondary :
 Take thy commission.

sworn to extirpate ; that is, to take away one of Shakspeare's characteristic marks ; which, if not one of the comeliest, is yet one of the strongest. So he alters this to,

To one that can, in my part me advertise.

A better expression indeed, but, for all that, none of Shakspeare's.
 WARBURTON.

I know not whether we may not better read,—

One that can, my part to him advertise.

One that can inform himself of that which it would be otherwise my part to tell him. JOHNSON.

To advertise is used in this sense, and with Shakspeare's accentuation, by Chapman, in his version of the 11th Book of the Odyssey :

“ Or, of my father, if thy royal ear

“ Hath been advertis'd — —.” STEEVENS.

I believe, the meaning is,—I am talking to one who is himself already sufficiently conversant with the nature and duties of my office ; — of that office, which I have now delegated to him.

So, in Timon of Athens :

“ It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,

“ To speak with Timon.” MALONE.

I believe that — Hold therefore, Angelo ; are the words which the Duke utters on tendering his commission to him. He concludes with — Take thy commission. STEEVENS.

If a full point be put after therefore, the Duke may be understood to speak of himself. Hold therefore, i. e. Let me therefore hold or stop. And the sense of the whole passage may be this. — The Duke, who has begun an exhortation to Angelo, checks himself thus : “ But I am speaking to one, that can in him [in or by himself] apprehend my part [all that I have to say] : I will therefore say no more [on that subject].” He then merely signifies to Angelo his appointment. TYRWHITT.

 JOHNSON.

ANG. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.

DUKE. No more evasion:
We have with a leaven'd and prepared choice<sup>3</sup>
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition,
That it prefers itself, and leaves unquestion'd
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concernings shall impórtune,
How it goes with us; and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

ANG. Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.<sup>4</sup>

DUKE. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own;<sup>5</sup>
So to enforce, or qualify the laws,
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand;

<sup>4</sup> — bring you something on the way. ] i. e. accompany you. So, in A Woman kill'd with Kindness, by Heywood, 1617: "She went very lovingly to bring him on his way to horse." And the same mode of expression is to be found in almost every writer of the times. REED.

I'll privily away: I love the people,
 But do not like to stage me to their eyes: <sup>6</sup>
 Though it do well, I do not relish well
 Their loud applause, and aves vehement;
 Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
 That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

ANG. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

ESCAL. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness!

DUKE. I thank you: Fare you well. [Exit.

ESCAL. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
 To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
 To look into the bottom of my place:
 A power I have; but of what strength and nature
 I am not yet instructed.

ANG. 'Tis so with me: — Let us withdraw together,
 And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

ESCAL. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

A Street.

Enter LUCIO, and two Gentlemen.

LUCIO. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why, then all the dukes fall upon the king.

<sup>6</sup> ——— to stage me to their eyes:] So, in one of Queen Elizabeth's speeches to parliament, 1586: "We princes, I tel you, are set on stages, in the sight and viewe of all the world," &c. See The Copy of a Letter to the Right Honourable the Earle of Leycester, &c. 4to. 1586. STEEVENS.

1 GENT. Heaven grant ut its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 GENT. Amen.

LUCIO. Thou concludest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 GENT. Thou shalt not steal?

LUCIO. Ay, that he razed.

1 GENT. Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions; they put forth to steal: There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 GENT. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

LUCIO. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 GENT. No? a dozen times at least.

1 GENT. What? in metre?<sup>7</sup>

LUCIO. In any proportion,<sup>8</sup> or in any language.

1 GENT. I think, or in any religion.

LUCIO. Ay! why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy:<sup>9</sup> As for example; Thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

<sup>7</sup> — in metre? ] In the primers there are metrical graces, such as, I suppose, were used in Shakspeare's time. JOHNSON.

This speech is improperly given to Lucio. It clearly belongs to the second Gentleman, who had heard grace "a dozen times at least." Ritson.

<sup>9</sup> Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: ] Satirically insinuating, that the controversies about grace were so intricate and endless, that the disputants unsettled every thing but this, that grace was grace; which, however, in spite of controversy, still remained certain. Warburton.

1 GENT. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us. <sup>2</sup>

LUCIO. I grant; as there may between the lifts and the velvet: Thou art the lift.

1 GENT. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou art a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a lift of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. <sup>3</sup> Do I speak feelingly now?

I am in doubt whether Shakspeare's thoughts reached so far into ecclesiastical disputes. Every commentator is warped a little by the tract of his own profession. The question is, whether the second gentleman has ever heard grace. The first gentleman limits the question to grace in metre. Lucio enlarges it to grace in any form or language. The first gentleman, to go beyond him, says, or in any religion, which Lucio allows, because the nature of things is unalterable; grace is as immutably grace, as his merry antagonist is a wicked villain. Difference in religion cannot make a grace not to be grace, a prayer not to be holy; as nothing can make a villain not to be a villain. This seems to be the meaning, such as it is. JOHNSON.

<sup>2</sup> — there went but a pair of sheers between us.] We are both of the same piece. JOHNSON.

So, in The Maid of the Mill, by Beaumont and Fletcher: —
“There went but a pair of sheers and a bodkin, between them.”

STEEVENS.

The same expression is likewise found in Marston's Malcontent, 1604: “There goes but a pair of sheers betwixt an emperor and the son of a bagpiper; only the dying, dressing, pressing, and glossing, makes the difference.” MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> — pill'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet.] The jest about the pile of a French velvet, alludes to the loss of hair in the French disease, a very frequent topick of our author's jocularity. Lucio finding that the gentleman understands the distemper so well, and mentions it so feelingly, promises to remember to drink his health, but to forget to drink after him. It was the opinion of Shakspeare's time, that the cup of an infected person was contagious. JOHNSON.

The jest lies between the similar sound of the words pill'd and pil'd. This I have elsewhere explained, under a passage in Henry VIII.

“Pill'd priest thou liest.” STEEVENS.

LUCIO. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 GENT. I think, I have done myself wrong; have I not?

2 GENT. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art tainted, or free.

LUCIO. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes! <sup>4</sup> I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

2 GENT. To what, I pray?

1 GENT. Judge.

2 GENT. To three thousand dollars a year.<sup>5</sup>

1 GENT. Ay, and more.

LUCIO. A French crown more.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes!] In the old copy this speech and the next but one, are attributed to Lucio. The present regulation was suggested by Mr. Pope. What Lucio says afterwards, "A French crown more," proves that it is right. He would not utter a sarcasm against himself. MALONE.

The same jest occurred before in The Tempest. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> A French crown more.] Lucio means here not the piece of money so called, but that venereal scab, which among the surgeons is styled corona Veneris. To this, I think, our author likewise makes Quince allude in A Midsummer Night's Dream:

"Some of your French crowns have no hair at all; and then you will play bare-faced."

For where these eruptions are, the skull is carious, and the party becomes bald. THEOBALD.

So, in The Return from Parnassus, 1606:

"I may chance indeed to give the world a bloody nose; but it shall hardly give me a crack'd crown, though it gives other poets French crowns."

1 GENT. Thou art always figuring diseases in me: but thou art full of error; I am sound.

LUCIO. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound, as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow;<sup>7</sup> impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 GENT. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

BAWD. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carry'd to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

1 GENT. Who's that, I pray thee?

BAWD. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, signior Claudio.

1 GENT. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

BAWD. Nay, but I know, 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head's to be chopped off.

LUCIO. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so: Art thou sure of this?

BAWD. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

LUCIO. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since; and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Again, in the Dedication to Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is up, 1598:

" ——— never meetst with any requital, except it were some few French crownes, pil'd friers crownes," &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> ——— thy bones are hollow;] So Timon, addressing himself to Phrynia and Timandra:

" Consumptions sow

" In hollow bones of man." STEEVENS.

2 GENT. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 GENT. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

LUCIO. Away; let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt LUCIO, and Gentlemen.

BAWD. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat,<sup>7</sup> what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

CLO. Yonder man is carried to prison.

BAWD. Well; what has he done?

CLO. A woman.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> ——— what with the sweat,] This may allude to the sweating sickness of which the memory was very fresh in the time of Shakspeare: but more probably to the method of cure then used for the diseases contracted in brothels. JOHNSON.

So, in the comedy of Doctor Dodypoll 1600:

“ You are very moist, fir: did you sweat all this, I pray?

“ You have not the disease, I hope. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> ——— what has he done?

CLO. A woman.] The ancient meaning of the verb to do, (though now obsolete) may be guess'd at from the following passages:

“ Chiron. Thou hast undone our mother.

“ Aaron. Villain, I've done thy mother.” Titus Andronicus.

Again, in Ovid's Elegies, translated by Marlowe, printed at Middlebourg, no date:

“ The strumpet with the stranger will not do,

“ Before the room is clear, and door put to.”

Again, in The Maid's Tragedy, Act II. Evadne, while undressing, says, —

“ I am soon undone.

Dula answers, “ And as soon done.”

Hence the name of Over-done, which Shakspeare has appropriated to his bawd. COLLINS.

BAWD. But what's his offence?

CLO. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.<sup>9</sup>

BAWD. What, is there a maid with child by him?

CLO. No; but there's a woman with maid by him: You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

BAWD. What proclamation, man?

CLO. All houses in the suburbs<sup>2</sup> of Vienna must be pluck'd down.

BAWD. And what shall become of those in the city?

CLO. They shall stand for feed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

BAWD. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?<sup>3</sup>

<sup>9</sup> — in a peculiar river.] i. e. a river belonging to an individual; not public property. MALONE.

<sup>2</sup> All houses in the suburbs —] This is surely too general an expression, unless we suppose, that all the houses in the suburbs were bawdy-houses. It appears too, from what the bawd says below, "But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down?" that the Clown had been particular in his description of the houses which were to be pulled down. I am therefore inclined to believe that we should read here, all bawdy-houses, or all houses of resort in the suburbs. TYRWHITT.

<sup>3</sup> But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?] This will be understood from the Scotch law of James's time, concerning haires (whores): "that comoun women be put at the utmost endes of townes, queire least perril of fire is." Hence Ursula the pig-woman, in Bartholomew-Fair: "I, I, gamesters, mock a plain, plump, soft wench of the suburbs, do!" FARMER.

So, in The Malcontent, 1604, when Altofront dismisses the various characters at the end of the play to different destinations, he says to Macquerelle the bawd:

" — thou unto the suburbs."

Again, in Ram-Alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611:

" Some fourteen bawds; he kept her in the suburbs."

CLO. To the ground, mistress.

BAWD. Why, here's a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

CLO. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage; there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.

BAWD. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let's withdraw.

CLO. Here comes signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison: and there's madam Juliet.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

The same.

Enter Provost, CLAUDIO, JULIET, and Officers; LUCIO, and two Gentlemen.

CLAUD. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

PROV. I do it not in evil disposition,
But from lord Angelo by special charge.

CLAUD. Thus can the demi-god, Authority,
Make us pay down for our offence by weight.—

See Martial, where summanians and suburbana are applied to prostitutes. STEEVENS.

The licenced houses of resort at Vienna are at this time all in the suburbs, under the permission of the Committee of Chastity.
S. W.

The words of heaven ; — on whom it will , it will ;
On whom it will not , so ; yet still 'tis just.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> *Thus can the demi-god, Authority,
Make us pay down for our offence by weight. —
The words of heaven; — on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.]*

The sense of the whole is this: The demi-god Authority, makes us pay the full penalty of our offence, and its decrees are as little to be questioned as the words of heaven, which pronounces its pleasure thus, — I punish and remit punishment according to my own uncontroulable will; and yet who can say, what dost thou? — Make us pay down for our offence by weight, is a fine expression to signify paying the full penalty. The metaphor is taken from paying money by weight, which is always exact; not so by tale, on account of the practice of diminishing the species. WARBURTON.

I suspect that a line is lost. JOHNSON.

It may be read, — The sword of heaven.

Thus can the demi-god Authority,

Make us pay down for our offence, by weight; —

The sword of heaven: — on whom, &c.

Authority is then poetically called the sword of heaven, which will spare or punish, as it is commanded. The alteration is slight, being made only by taking a single letter from the end of the word, and placing it at the beginning.

This very ingenious and elegant emendation was suggested to me by the Reverend Dr. Roberts, Provost of Eton; and it may be countenanced by the following passage in The Cobbler's Prophecy, 1594:

“ In brief, they are the swords of heaven to punish.”

Sir W. D'Avenant, who incorporated this play of Shakspeare with Much ado about Nothing, and formed out of them a Tragic-comedy called The Law against Lovers, omits the two last lines of this speech; I suppose, on account of their seeming obscurity.

STEEVENS.

The very ingenious emendation proposed by Dr. Roberts, is yet more strongly supported by another passage in the play before us, where this phrase occurs, (Act III. sc. last):

“ He who the sword of heaven will bear,

“ Should be as holy, as severe.”

Yet I believe the old copy is right. MALONE.

Notwithstanding Dr. Roberts's ingenious conjecture, the text is certainly right. Authority, being absolute in Angelo, is finely stiled by Claudio, the demi-god. To this uncontroulable power, the poet applies a passage from St. Paul to the Romans, ch. ix, LUCIO. Why, how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

CLAUD. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:

As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope by the immoderate use
Turns to restraint: Our natures do pursue,
(Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,) <sup>4</sup>
A thirsty evil; and when we drink, we die. <sup>5</sup>

LUCIO. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest,
I would send for certain of my creditors: And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality <sup>6</sup> of imprisonment. — What's thy offence, Claudio?

v. 15. 18, which he properly styles, the words of heaven: "for he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy," &c. And again: "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy," &c. HENLEY.

It should be remembered, however, that the poet is here speaking not of mercy, but punishment. MALONE.

Mr. Malone might have spared himself this remark, had he recollected that the words of St. Paul immediately following, and to which the &c. referred, are — "and whom he will he hardeneth." See also the preceding verse. HENLEY.

<sup>4</sup> Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,] To ravin was formerly used for eagerly or voraciously devouring any thing: so in Wilson's Epistle to the Earl of Leicester, prefixed to his Discourse upon Usury, 1572: "For these bee the greedie cormoraunte wolves indeed, that ravyn up both beaste and man." REED.

Ravin is an ancient word for prey. So, in Noah's Flood, by Drayton:

"As well of ravine, as that chew the cud." STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — when we drink, we die.] So, in Revenge for Honour, by Chapman:

"Like poison'd rats, which when they've swallowed

"The pleasing bane, rest not until they drink;

"And can rest then much less, until they burst."

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — as the morality —] The old copy has mortality. It was corrected by Sir William D'Avenant. MALONE.

CLAUD. What, butto speak of would offend again.

LUCIO. What is it? murder?

CLAUD. No.

LUCIO. Lechery?

CLAUD. Call it so.

PROV. Away, sir; you must go.

CLAUD. One word, good friend:—Lucio, a word with you. [Takes him aside.

LUCIO. A hundred, if they'll do you any good. —
Is lechery so look'd after?

CLAUD. Thus stands it with me:—Upon a true contract,

I got possession of Julietta's bed; <sup>7</sup>
You know the lady; she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation lack
Of outward order: this we came not to,
Only for propagation of a dower
Remaining in the coffer of her friends; <sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> I got possession of Julietta's bed, &c.] This speech is surely too indelicate to be spoken concerning Juliet, before her face; for she appears to be brought in with the rest, though she has nothing to say. The Clown points her out as they enter; and yet, from Claudio's telling Lucio, that he knows the lady, &c. one would think she was not meant to have made her personal appearance on the scene. STEEVENS.

The little seeming impropriety there is, will be entirely removed, by supposing that when Claudio stops to speak to Lucio, the Provost's officers depart with Julietta. RITSON.

Claudio may be supposed to speak to Lucio apart. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> “ ——— this we came not to,

“ Remaining in the coffer of her friends;] This singular mode of expression certainly demands some elucidation. The sense appears to be this. “ We did not think it proper publickly to celebrate our marriage; for this reason, that there might be no hindrance to the payment of Julietta's portion which was then in the hands of her friends; from whom, therefore, we judged it expedient to conceal our

From whom we thought it meet to hide our love,
Till time had made them for us. But it chances,
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment,
With character too gross, is writ on Juliet.

LUCIO. With child, perhaps?

CLAUD. Unhappily, even so,
And the new deputy now for the duke, —
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness;<sup>9</sup>
Or whether that the body public be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command, lets it straight feel the spur:
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fills it up,
I stagger in: — But this new governor
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties,

love till we had gained their favour. " Propagation being here used to signify payment, must have its root in the Italian word pagare. Edinburgh Magazine for November, 1786.

I suppose the speaker means — for the sake of getting such a dower as her friends might hereafter bestow on her, when time had reconciled them to her clandestine marriage. STEEVENS.

Perhaps we should read — only for prorogation. MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> — the fault and glimpse of newness; ] Fault and glimpse have so little relation to each other, that both can scarcely be right: we may read flash for fault: or, perhaps, we may read,

Whether it be the fault or glimpse —

That is, whether it be the seeming enormity of the action, or the glare of new authority. Yet the same sense follows in the next lines. JOHNSON.

Fault, I apprehend, does not refer to any enormous act done by the deputy, (as Dr. Johnson seems to have thought,) but to newness. The fault and glimpse is the same as the faulty glimpse. And the meaning seems to be — Whether it be the fault of newness, a fault arising from the mind being dazzled by a novel authority, of which the new governor has yet had only a glimpse, — has yet taken only a hasty survey; or whether, &c. Shakspeare has many similar expressions. MALONE.

Which have, like unscour'd armour, <sup>2</sup> hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacks have gone round, <sup>3</sup>
And none of them been worn; and, for a name,
Now puts the drowsy and neglected act
Freshly on me: <sup>4</sup> — 'tis, surely, for a name.

LUCIO. I warrant, it is: and thy head stands so tickle <sup>5</sup> on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, my sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

CLAUD. I have done so, but he's not to be found.
I pr'ythee, Lucio, do me this kind service:

“ Like rusty mail in monumental mockery.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> So long, that nineteen zodiacks have gone round,] The Duke, in the scene immediately following, says:

Which for these fourteen years we have let slip.

THEOBALD.

<sup>4</sup> — But this new governor

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties

Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall

So long, —

Now puts the drowsy and neglected act

Freshly on me:] Lord Strafford, in the conclusion of his Defence in the House of Lords, had, perhaps, these lines in his thoughts:

“ It is now full two hundred and forty years since any man was touched for this alledged crime, to this height, before myself.

— Let us rest contented with that which our fathers have left us; and not awake those sleeping lions, to our own destruction, by raking up a few musty records, that have lain so many ages by the walls, quite forgotten and neglected.” MALONE.

by our old dramatic authors. So, in The true Tragedy of Marius and Scilla, 1594:

“ — lords of Asia

“ Have stood on tickle terms.”

Again, in The Widow's Tears, by Chapman, 1612:

“ — upon as tickle a pin as the needle of a dial.”

STEEVENS.

This day my sister should the cloister enter,
And there receive her approbation: <sup>6</sup>
Acquaint her with the danger of my state;
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him;
I have great hope in that: for in her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect, <sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> — her approbation: ] i. e. enter on her probation, or noviciate.
So again, in this play:

“ I, in probation of a sisterhood. ” —

Again, in The Merry Devil of Edmonton, 1608:

“ Madam, for a twelvemonth’s approbation,

“ We mean to make the trial of our child. ” MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> — prone and speechless dialect, ] I can scarcely tell what signification to give to the word prone. Its primitive and translated senses are well known. The author may, by a prone dialect, mean a dialect which men are prone to regard, or a dialect natural and unforced, as those actions seem to which we are prone. Either of these interpretations is sufficiently strained; but such distortion of words is not uncommon in our author. For the sake of an easier sense, we may read:

— in her youth

There is a pow’r, and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men;

Or thus:

There is a prompt and speechless dialect. JOHNSON.

Prone, perhaps, may stand for humble, as a prone posture is a posture of supplication.

So, in The Opportunity, by Shirley, 1640:

“ You have prostrate language. ”

The same thought occurs in The Winter’s Tale:

“ The silence often of pure innocence

“ Persuades, when speaking fails. ”

Sir W. D’Avenant, in his alteration of the play, changes prone to sweet. I mention some of his variations, to shew that what appear difficulties to us, were difficulties to him, who, living nearer the time of Shakspeare, might be supposed to have understood his language more intimately. STEEVENS.

Prone, I believe, is used here for prompt, significant, expressive (though speechless), as in our author’s Rape of Lucrece it means ardent, head-strong, rushing forward to its object:

“ O that prone lust should stain so pure a bed! ”

Such as moves men; beside, she hath prosperous art
When she will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.

LUCIO. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition; <sup>8</sup> as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. <sup>9</sup> I'll to her.

CLAUD. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

LUCIO. Within two hours, —

CLAUD. Come, officer, away. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

A Monastery.

Enter DUKE, and Friar Thomas.

DUKE. No; holy father; throw away that thought;
Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom: <sup>2</sup> why I desire thee

Again, in Cymbeline: "Unless a man would marry a gallows, and beget young gibbets, I never saw any one so prone."

MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> Under grievous imposition;] I once thought it should be inquisition, but the present reading is probably right. The crime would be under grievous penalties imposed. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> — lost at a game of tick-tack.] Tick-tack is a game at tables. "Jouer au tric-trac," is used in French, in a wanton sense. MALONE.

Can pierce a complete bosom:*] Think not that a breast completely armed can be pierced by the dart of love, that comes fluttering without force. JOHNSON.

To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose
More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

FRI. May your grace speak of it?

DUKE. My holy fir, none better knows than you
How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;<sup>3</sup>
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witlefs bravery<sup>4</sup> keeps.<sup>5</sup>
I have deliver'd to lord Angelo

So, in the Prologue to Milton's Masque at Ludlow Castle: I mean the MS. copy in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge:

" — I was not sent to court your wonder

" With distant worlds, and strange removed climes."

STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — witlefs bravery —] Bravery, in the present instance, signifies showy dress. So, in The Taming of a Shrew:

" With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery."

STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — keeps.] i. e. dwells, resides. In this sense it is still used at Cambridge, where the students and fellows, referring to their collegiate apartments, always say they keep, i. e. reside there. REED.

<sup>6</sup> A man of stricture, and firm abstinence,] Stricture makes no sense in this place. We should read:

A man of strict ure and firm abstinence.

i. e. a man of the exactest conduct, and practised in the subdual of his passions. Ure is an old word for use, practice: so enur'd, habituated to. WARBURTON.

Stricture may easily be used for strictness; ure is indeed an old word, but, I think, always applied to things, never to persons.

JOHNSON.

Sir W. D'Avenant, in his alteration of this play, reads, strictness. Ure is sometimes applied to persons, as well as to things. So, in the Old Interlude of Tom Tyler and his Wife, 1661:

" So shall I be sure

" To keep him in ure."

The same word occurs in Promos and Cassandra, 1578:

" The crafty man oft puts these wrongs in ure."

STEEVENS.

My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
 And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;
 For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,
 And so it is receiv'd: Now, pious sir,
 You will demand of me, why I do this?

FRI. Gladly, my lord.

DUKE. We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,
 (The needful bits and curbs for head-strong steeds,) <sup>6</sup>
 Which for these fourteen years we have let sleep; <sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> The needful bits and curbs for head-strong steeds,] In the copies,

The needful bits and curbs for head-strong weeds.

There is no manner of analogy or consonance in the metaphors here: and, though the copies agree, I do not think the author would have talked of bits and curbs for weeds. On the other hand, nothing can be more proper, than to compare persons of unbridled licentiousness to head-strong steeds: and, in this view, bridling the passions has been a phrase adopted by our best poets.

THEOBALD.

<sup>7</sup> Which for these fourteen years we have let sleep;] Thus the old copy: which also reads, —

“ — we have let slip.” STEEVENS.

For fourteen I have made no scruple to replace nineteen. The reason will be obvious to him who recollects what the Duke [Claudio] has said in a foregoing scene. I have altered the odd phrase of “letting the laws slip,” for how does it sort with the comparison that follows, of a lion in his cave that went not out to prey? But letting the laws sleep, adds a particular propriety to the thing represented, and accords exactly too with the simile. It is the metaphor too, that our author seems fond of using upon this occasion, in several other passages of this play:

The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept;

—— 'Tis now awake.

And, so again:

—— but this new governor

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties;

—— and for a name,

Now puts the drowsy and neglected at

Freshly on me. THEOBALD.

Even like an o'er-grown lion in a cave,
 That goes not out to prey: Now, as fond fathers
 Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch,
 Only to stick it in their children's sight,
 For terror, not to use; in time the rod Becomes more mock'd, than fear'd: <sup>8</sup> so our decrees,

Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
 And liberty plucks justice by the nose;
 The baby beats the nurse, <sup>9</sup> and quite athwart
 Goes all decorum.

FRI. It rested in your grace
 To unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd:

The latter emendation may derive support from a passage in Hamlet:

" — How stand I then,
 " That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
 " Excitements of my reason and my blood,
 " And let all sleep?"

If slip be the true reading, (which, however, I do not believe,) the sense may be, — which for these fourteen years we have suffered to pass unnoticed, unobserved; for so the same phrase is used in Twelfth Night: — "Let him let this matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet."

Mr. Theobald altered fourteen to nineteen, to make the Duke's account correspond with a speech of Claudio's in a former scene, but without necessity. Claudio would naturally represent the period during which the law had not been put in practice, greater than it really was. MALONE.

Theobald's correction is misplaced. If any correction is really necessary, it should have been made where Claudio, in a foregoing scene, says nineteen years. I am disposed to take the Duke's words. WHALLEY.

And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd,
Than in lord Angelo.

DUKE. I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith <sup>9</sup> 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike, and gall them,
For what I bid them do: For we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father,

I have on Angelo impos'd the office;
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do it slander: <sup>2</sup> And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear <sup>3</sup> me

So do in slander: —

Sir Thomas Hanmer has very well corrected it thus:

To do it slander:

Yet perhaps less alteration might have produced the true reading:

And yet my nature never, in the fight,

So doing slandered: —

And yet my nature never suffer slander, by doing any open acts of severity. JOHNSON.

The old text stood,

_____ in the fight

To do in slander: —

Hanmer's emendation is supported by a passage in King Henry IV. P. I:

"Do me no slander, Douglas, I dare fight." STEEVENS.

Fight seems to be countenanced by the words ambush and strike. Sight was introduced by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,
 At our more leisure shall I render you ;
 Only, this one: — Lord Angelo is precise ;
 Stands at a guard <sup>a</sup> with envy; scarce confesses
 That his blood flows, or that his appetite
 Is more to bread than stone: Hence shall we see,
 If power change purpose, what our seemers be.

S C E N E V.

A Nunnery.

Enter ISABELLA and FRANCISCA.

ISAB. And have you nuns no further privileges?

FRAN. Are not these large enough?

ISAB. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more ;
 But rather wishing a more strict restraint
 Upon the sister-hood, the votarists of saint Clare.

LUCIO. Ho! Peace be in this place! [Within]

ISAB. Who's that which calls?

Perhaps the word which I have inserted in the text, had dropped out while the sheet was at press. A similar phrase occurs in The Tempest:

" — some good instruction give

" How I may bear me here."

Sir W. D'Avenant reads, in his alteration of the play:

I may in person a true friar seem.

The sense of the passage (as Mr. Henley observes) is — How I may demean myself, so as to support the character I have assumed.

<sup>a</sup> Stands at a guard —] Stands on terms of defiance.

JOHNSON.

This rather means, to stand cautiously on his defence, than on terms of defiance. M. MASON.

FRAN. It is a man's voice: Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn:
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,

But in the presence of the prioress:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
He calls again; I pray you, answer him.

[Exit FRANCISCA.]

ISAB. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter LUCIO.

LUCIO. Hail, virgin, if you be; as those cheek-roses

Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio?

ISAB. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask;
The rather, for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his sister.

LUCIO. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greet you:

Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

ISAB. Woe me! For what?

LUCIO. For that, which, if myself might be his judge, <sup>s</sup>

He should receive his punishment in thanks:
He hath got his friend with child.

<sup>s</sup> For that, which, if myself might be his judge,] Perhaps these words were transposed at the press. The sense seems to require — That, for which, &c. MALONE.

ISAB. Sir, make me not your story.<sup>6</sup>

LUCIO.

It is true.

I would not<sup>7</sup>—though 'tis my familiar sin

<sup>6</sup> — make me not your story.] Do not, by deceiving me, make me a subject for a tale. JOHNSON.

Perhaps only, Do not divert yourself with me, as you would with a story, do not make me the subject of your drama. Benedick talks of becoming—the argument of his own scorn.

Sir W. D'Avenant reads—scorn instead of story.

After all, the irregular phrase [me, &c.] that perhaps, obscures this passage, occurs frequently in our author, and particularly in the next scene, where Escalus says: "Come me to what was done to her."—"Make me not your story," may therefore signify—invent not your story on purpose to deceive me. "It is true," in Lucio's reply, means—What I have already told you, is true. STEEVENS.

Mr. Ritson explains this passage, "do not make a jest of me." REED.

I have no doubt that we ought to read (as I have printed,) Sir, mock me not;—your story.

So, in Macbeth:

"Thou com'st to use thy tongue:—thy story quickly."

In King Lear we have—"Pray, do not mock me."

I beseech you, Sir, (says Isabel) do not play upon my fears; reserve this idle talk for some other occasion;—proceed at once to your tale. Lucio's subsequent words, ["'Tis true,"—i. e. you are right; I thank you for reminding me;] which, as the text has been hitherto printed had no meaning, are then pertinent and clear. Mr. Pope was so sensible of the impossibility of reconciling them to what preceded in the old copy, that he fairly omitted them.

What Isabella says afterwards, fully supports this emendation:

"You do blaspheme the good, in mocking me."

I have observed that almost every passage in our author, in which there is either a broken speech, or a sudden transition without a connecting particle, has been corrupted by the carelessness of either the transcriber or compositor. See a note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act. II. sc. i:

"A man of—sovereign, peerless, he's esteem'd."

And another on Coriolanus, Act I. sc. iv:

"You shames of Rome! you herd of—Boils and plagues

"Plaster you o'er!" MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> I would not—] i. e. Be assured, I would not mock you. So afterwards: "Do not believe it:" i. e. Do not suppose that I would mock you. MALONE.

I am satisfied with the sense afforded by the old punctuation.

STEEVENS.

With maids to seem the lapwing,<sup>8</sup> and to jest,
 Tongue far from heart,—play with all virgins so :<sup>9</sup>
 I hold you as a thing ensky'd, and fainted ;

8 ——— 'tis my familiar sin

With maids to seem the lapwing,] The Oxford editor's note on this passage is in these words: The lapwings fly, with seeming fright and anxiety, far from their nests, to deceive those who seek their young. And do not all other birds do the same? But what has this to do with the infidelity of a general lover, to whom this bird is compared? It is another quality of the lapwing that is here alluded to, viz. its perpetually flying so low and so near the passenger, that he thinks he has it, and then is suddenly gone again. This made it a proverbial expression to signify a lover's falshood: and it seems to be a very old one; for Chaucer, in his Plowman's Tale, says:

“ — And lapwings that well conith lie.” WARBURTON.

The modern editors have not taken in the whole similitude here: they have taken notice of the lightness of a spark's behaviour to his mistress, and compared it to the lapwing's hovering and fluttering as it flies. But the chief, of which no notice is taken, is, — “ ——— and to jest.” (See Ray's Proverbs) “The lapwing cries, tongue far from heart.” i. e. most farthest from the nest, i. e. She is, as Shakspeare has it here, — Tongue far from heart. “The farther she is from her nest, where her heart is with her young ones, she is the louder, or perhaps all tongue.” SMITH.

Shakspeare has an expression of the like kind, in his Comedy of Errors:

“ Adr. Far from her nest the lapwing cries away ;

“ My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.”

We meet with the same thought in Lyly's Campaspe, 1584; from whence Shakspeare might borrow it:

“ Alex. ——— you resemble the lapwing, who crieth most where her nest is not, and so, to lead me from espying your love for Campaspe, you cry Timoclea.” GREY.

9 I would not ——— though 'tis my familiar sin

With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest,

Tongue far from heart, — play with all virgins so : &c.] This passage has been pointed in the modern editions thus:

'Tis true: — I would not (though 'tis my familiar sin

With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest,

Tongue far from heart) play with all virgins so :

I hold you, &c.

According to this punctuation, Lucio is made to deliver a sentiment directly opposite to that which the author intended. Though

By your renouncement, an immortal spirit;
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a faint.

ISAB. You do blaspheme the good, in mocking me.

LUCIO. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth, <sup>2</sup>

'tis thus:

Your brother and his lover <sup>3</sup> have embrac'd:

As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time, <sup>4</sup>

'tis my common practice to jest with and to deceive all virgins, I would not so play with all virgins.

The sense, as I have regulated my text, appears to me clear and easy. 'Tis very true, (says he) I ought indeed, as you say, to proceed at once to my story. Be assured, I would not mock you. Though it is my familiar practice to jest with maidens, and, like the lapwing, to deceive them by my insincere prattle, though, I say, it is my ordinary and habitual practice to sport in this manner with all virgins, yet I should never think of treating you so; for I consider you, in consequence of your having renounced the world, as an immortal spirit, as one to whom I ought to speak with as much sincerity as if I were addressing a faint. MALONE.

Mr. Malone complains of a contradiction which I cannot find in the speech of Lucio. He has not said that it is his practice to jest with and deceive all virgins. "Though (says he) is is my practice with maids to seem the lapwing, I would not play with all virgins so;" meaning that she herself is the exception to his usual practice. Though he has treated other women with levity, he is serious in his address to her. STEEVENS.

So, in Tarleton's Newes out of Purgatory, bl. l. no date: "— he spide the fetch, and perceived that all this while this was his lover's husband, to whom he had revealed these escapes." MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> — as blossoming time,

That from the seedness the bare fallow brings

To teeming foison; even so — ] As the sentence now stands, it is apparently ungrammatical. I read,

At blossoming time, &c.

That from the feedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry.

ISAB. Some one with child by him? — My cousin Juliet?

LUCIO. Is she your cousin?

ISAB. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names,

By vain though apt affection.

LUCIO.

She it is.

ISAB. O, let him marry her!

LUCIO.

This is the point.

The duke is very strangely gone from hence:

Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,

In hand, and hope of action: <sup>6</sup> but we do learn

That is, As they that feed grow full, so her womb now at blossoming time, at that time through which the seed time proceeds to the harvest, her womb shows what has been doing. Lucio ludicrously calls pregnancy blossoming time, the time when fruit is promised, though not yet ripe. JOHNSON.

Instead of that, we may read — doth; and, instead of brings, bring. Foison is plenty. So, in The Tempest:

“ — nature should bring forth,

“ Of its own kind, all foison,” &c.

Teeming foison, is abundant produce. STEEVENS.

The passage seems to me to require no amendment; and the meaning of it is this: “As blossoming time proves the good tillage of the farmer, so the fertility of her womb expresses Claudio’s full tilth and husbandry.” By blossoming time is meant, the time when the ears of corn are formed. M. MASON.

This sentence, as Dr. Johnson has observed, is apparently ungrammatical. I suspect two half lines have been lost. Perhaps however an imperfect sentence was intended, of which there are many instances in these plays: — or, as might have been used in the sense of like. Tilth is tillage.

So, in our author’s 3d Sonnet:

“ For who is she so fair, whose unear’d womb

“ Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?” MALONE.

In hand, and hope of action:] To bear in hand is a common LUCIO. Affay the power you have.

ISAB. My power! Alas! I doubt, —

LUCIO. Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and

ISAB. I'll see what I can do.

LUCIO. But, speedily.

<sup>3</sup> Has censur'd him—] i. e. sentenced him. So, in Othello:

“ — to you, lord governor,

“ Remains the censure of this hellish villain.” STEEVENS.

We should read, I think, He has censured him, &c. In the Mss. of our author's time, and frequently in the printed copy of these plays, he has, when intended to be contracted, is written—h'as. Hence probably the mistake here.

So, in Othello, 4to. 1622:

“ And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets

“ H'as done my office.”

Again, in All's well that ends well, p. 247, folio 1623, we find H'as twice, for He has. See also Twelfth-Night, p. 258, edit. 1623: “ — h'as been told so,” for “ he has been told so.”

MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> All their petitions are as freely theirs — ] All their requests are as freely granted to them, are granted in as full and beneficial a manner, as they themselves would wish. The editor of the second folio arbitrarily reads—as truly theirs; which has been followed in all the subsequent copies. MALONE.

A provost is generally the executioner of an army. So, in The Famous History of Tho. Stukely, 1605, bl. 1:

"Provost, lay irons upon him, and take him to your charge."
 Again, in The Virgin Martyr, by Massinger:

"Thy provost, to see execution done

"On these base Christians in Cæsarea." STEEVENS

A prison for military offenders is at this day, in some places, called the Prévôt. MALONE.

The Provost here, is not a military officer, but a kind of sheriff or gaoler, so called in foreign countries. DOUCE.

<sup>8</sup> — to fear the birds of prey,] To fear is to affright, to terrify. So, in The Merchant of Venice:

"— this aspect of mine

"Hath fear'd the valiant." STEEVENS.

And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
Their perch, and not their terror.

ESCAL. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death: <sup>9</sup> Alas! this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father.
Let but your honour know, <sup>2</sup>
(Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,)
That, in the working of your own affections,
Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose.
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Err'd in this point which now you censure him, <sup>3</sup>
And pull'd the law upon you.

<sup>9</sup> Than fall, and bruise to death:] I should rather read fell, i. e. strike down. So, in Timon of Athens:

" — All save thee,

" I fell with curses." WARBURTON.

Fall is the old reading, and the true one. Shakspeare has used the same verb active in The Comedy of Errors:

" — as easy may'st thou fall

" A drop of water," —

i. e. let fall. So, in As you Like it:

" — the executioner

" Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck." STEEVENS.

Than fall, and bruise to death:] i. e. fall the axe; — or rather, let the criminal fall, &c. MALONE.

<sup>2</sup> Let but your honour know,] To know is here to examine, to take cognisance. So, in A Midsummer Night's Dream:

" Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;

" Know of your youth, examine well your blood." JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> Err'd in this point, which now you censure him,] Some word seems to be wanting to make this line sense. Perhaps, we should read:

" Err'd in this point which now you censure him for." STEEVENS.

The sense undoubtedly requires, " — which now you censure him for," but the text certainly appears as the poet left it. I have elsewhere shewn that he frequently uses these elliptical expressions.
MALONE.

ANG. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
 Another thing to fall. I not deny,
 The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
 May, in the sworn twelve, have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try: What's open made to justice,

That justice seizes. <sup>4</sup> What know the laws.
 That thieves do pass on thieves? <sup>5</sup> 'Tis very pregnant, <sup>6</sup>

The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it,
 Because we see it; but what we do not see,
 We tread upon, and never think of it.
 You may not so extenuate his offence,
 For I have had <sup>7</sup> such faults; but rather tell me,
 When I, that censure him, do so offend,
 Let mine own judgement pattern out my death,
 And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

ESCAL. Be it as your wisdom will.

ANG. Where is the provost?

<sup>4</sup> That justice seizes.] For the sake of metre, I think we should read,—seizes on; or, perhaps, we should regulate the passage thus:

Guiltier than him they try: What's open made

To justice, justice seizes. What know, &c. STEEVENS.

That thieves do pass on thieves?] How can the administrators of the laws take cognizance of what I have just mentioned? How can they know, whether the jurymen who decide on the life or death of thieves be themselves as criminal as those whom they try?

To pass on is a forenicks term. MALONE.

So, in King Lear, Act. III. sc. vii:

"Though well we may not pass upon his life."

See my note on this passage. STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> 'Tis very pregnant,] 'Tis plain that we must act with bad as with good; we punish the faults, as we take the advantages that lie in our way, and what we do not see we cannot note.

JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> For I have had —] That is, because, by reason that I have had such faults. JOHNSON.

ESCAL. Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us all!

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall:

Some run from brakes of vice, and answer none;

And some condemned for a fault alone.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Some rise, &c.] This line is in the first folio printed in Italics as a quotation. All the folios read in the next line:

Some run from brakes of ice, and answer none.

JOHNSON.

The old reading is, perhaps, the true one, and may mean, some run away from danger, and stay to answer none of their faults, whilst others are condemned only on account of a single frailty.

If this be the true reading, it should be printed;

Some run from breaks [i. e. fractures] of ice, &c.

Since I suggested this, I have found reason to change my opinion.

A brake anciently meant not only a sharp bit, a snaffle, but also the engine with which farriers confined the legs of such unruly horses as would not otherwise submit themselves to be shod, or to have a cruel operation performed on them. This, in some places, is still called a smith's brake. In this last sense, Ben Jonson uses the word in his Underwoods:

"And not think he had eat a flake,

"Or were set up in a brake."

And, for the former sense, see The Silent Woman, A& IV.

Again, for the latter sense, Buffy d'Ambois, by Chapman:

"Or, like a strumpet, learn to set my face

"In an eternal brake."

Again, in The Opportunity, by Shirley, 1640:

"He is fallen into some brake, some wench has tied him by the legs."

Again, in Holland's Leaguer, 1633:

"—— her I'll make

"A flake, to catch this courtier in a brake."

I offer these quotations, which may prove of use to some more fortunate conjecturer; but am able myself to derive very little from them to suit the passage before us.

Enter ELBOW, FROTH, Clown, Officers, &c.

ELB. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a common-weal, that do nothing but use

I likewise find from Holinshed, p. 670, that the brake was an engine of torture. "The said Hawkins was cast into the Tower, and at length brought to the brake, called the Duke of Excester's daughter, by means of which pain he shewed many things," &c.

"When the Dukes of Exeter and Suffolk (says Blackstone, in his Commentaries, Vol. IV. chap. xxv. p. 320, 321,) and other ministers of Hen. VI. had laid a design to introduce the civil law into this kingdom as the rule of government, for a beginning thereof they erected a rack for torture; which was called in derision the Duke of Exeter's Daughter, and still remains in the Tower of London, where it was occasionally used as an engine of state, not of law, more than once in the reign of Queen Elizabeth." See Coke's Instit. 35. Barrington. 69. 385. and Fuller's Worthies, p. 317.

A part of this horrid engine still remains in the Tower, and the following is the figure of it:

It consists of a strong iron frame about six feet long, with three rollers of wood within it. The middle one of these, which has iron teeth at each end, is governed by two stops of iron, and was, probably, that part of the machine which suspended the powers of the rest, when the unhappy sufferer was sufficiently strained by the cords, &c. to begin confession. I cannot conclude this account of it without confessing my obligation to Sir Charles Frederick, who politely condescended to direct my enquiries, while their abuses in common houses. I know no law: bring them away.

his high command rendered every part of the Tower accessible to my researches.

I have since observed that, in Fox's Martyrs, edit. 1596, p. 1843, there is a representation of the same kind. To this also, Skelton, in his Why come ye not to Court, seems to allude:

"And with a cole rake
"Bruise them on a brake."

If Shakspeare alluded to this engine, the sense of the contested passage will be: Some run more than once from engines of punishment, and answer no interrogatories: while some are condemned to suffer for a single trespass.

It should not, however, be dissembled, that yet a plainer meaning may be deduced from the same words. By brakes of vice may be meant a collection, a number, a thicket of vices. The same image occurs in Daniel's Civil Wars, B. IV:

"Rushing into the thickest woods of spears,
"And brakes of swords," &c.

That a brake meant a bush, may be known from Drayton's poem on Moses and his Miracles:

"Where God unto the Hebrew spake,
"Appearing from the burning brake."

Again, in The Mooncalf of the same author:

"He brings into a brake of briars and thorn,
"And so entangles."

Mr. Tollet is of opinion that, by brakes of vice, Shakspeare means only the thorny paths of vice.

So, in Ben Jonson's Underwoods, Whalley's edit. Vol. VI. p. 367:

"Look at the false and cunning man, &c.—
"Crush'd in the snakey brakes that he had past."

STEEVENS.

The words—answer none (that is, make no confession of guilt) evidently shew that brake of vice here means the engine of torture. The same mode of question is again referred to in A & V:

"To the rack with him: we'll touze you joint by joint,
"But we will know this purpose."

The name of brake of vice, appears to have been given this machine, from its resemblance to that used to subdue vicious horses; to which Daniel thus refers:

"Lyke as the brake within the rider's hande
"Doth straine the horse nye wood with grief of paine,
"Not us'd before to come in such a band," &c.

HENLEY.

ANG. How now, fir! What's your name? and what's the matter?

ELB. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow; I do lean upon justice, fir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

ANG. Benefactors? Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?

ELB. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world, that good christians ought to have.

ESCAL. This comes off well; <sup>9</sup> here's a wise officer.

ANG. Go to: What quality are they of? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow? <sup>2</sup>

CLO. He cannot, fir; he's out at elbow.

I am not satisfied with either the old or present reading of this very difficult passage; yet have nothing better to propose. The modern reading, vice, was introduced by Mr. Rowe. In King Henry VIII. we have “ 'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake .

“ That virtue must go through.” MALONE.

The same phrase is employed in Timon of Athens, and elsewhere; but in the present instance it is used ironically. The meaning of it, when seriously applied to speech, is — This is well delivered, this story is well told. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?] Says Angelo to the constable. “ He cannot, fir, (quoth the Clown,) he's out at elbow.” I know not whether this quibble be generally understood: he is out at the word elbow, and out at the elbow of his coat. The Constable, in his account of master Froth and the Clown, has a stroke at the Puritans, who were very zealous against the stage about this time: “ Precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world, that good Christians ought to have.” FARMER.

ANG. What are you, fir?

ELB. He, fir? a tapster, fir; parcel-bawd;<sup>3</sup> one that serves a bad woman; whose house, fir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house,<sup>4</sup> which, I think, is a very ill house too.

ESCAL. How know you that?

ELB. My wife, fir, whom I detest<sup>5</sup> before heaven and your honour, —

ESCAL. How! thy wife?

ELB. Ay, fir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman; —

ESCAL. Dost thou detest her therefore?

ELB. I say, fir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

ESCAL. How dost thou know that, constable?

ELB. Marry, fir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

ESCAL. By the woman's means?

<sup>3</sup> — a tapster, fir; parcel-bawd; ] This we should now express by saying, he is half-tapster, half-bawd. JOHNSON.

Thus, in King Henry IV. P. II: " — a parcel-gilt goblet."

STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — she professes a hot-house, ] A hot-house is an English name for a Bagnio. So, Ben Jonson:

"Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,

"A purging bill now fix'd upon the door,

"Tells you it is a hot-house: so it may,

"And still be a whore-house." JOHNSON.

<sup>5</sup> — whom I detest — ] He designed to say protest. Mrs. Quickly makes the same blunder in The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act I. sc. iv. — "But, I detest, an honest maid," &c. STEEVENS.

ELB. Ay, fir, by mistress Overdone's means: <sup>6</sup> but as she spit in his face, so she defy'd him.

CLO. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

ELB. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

ESCAL. Do you hear how he misplaces?

[To ANGELO.]

CLO. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing (saying your honour's reverence,) for stew'd prunes; <sup>7</sup> fir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, <sup>8</sup> but very good dishes.

ESCAL. Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, fir.

CLO. No, indeed, fir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but, to the point: As I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes;

<sup>6</sup> Ay, fir, by mistress Overdone's means:] Here seems to have been some mention made of Froth, who was to be accused, and some words therefore may have been lost, unless the irregularity of the narrative may be better imputed to the ignorance of the constable. JOHNSON.

So, in Maroccus Exstaticus, or Bankes's Bay Horse in a Trance, 1395: "With this stocke of wenches will this trustie Roger and his Bettrice set up, forsooth, with their pamphlet pots and stewed prunes, &c. in a sinful saucer," &c.

See a note on the 3d scene of the 3d Act of the First Part of King Henry IV. In the old copy prunes are spelt, according to vulgar pronunciation, prewyns. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — not China dishes;] A China dish, in the age of Shakspeare, must have been such an uncommon thing, that the Clown's exemption of it, as no utensil in a common brothel, is a striking circumstance in his absurd and tautological deposition.

STEEVENS.

and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; — for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three pence again.

FROTH. No, indeed.

CLO. Very well: you being then, if you be remember'd, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes.

FROTH. Ay, so I did, indeed.

CLO. Why, very well: I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you;

FROTH. All this is true.

CLO. Why, very well then.

ESCAL. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. — What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

CLO. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

ESCAL. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

CLO. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave: And, I beseech you, look into master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas? — Was't not at Hallowmas, master Froth?

FROTH. All-holland eve.

CLO. Why, very well; I hope here be truths: He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair,<sup>9</sup> sir; — <sup>9</sup> — in a lower chair,] Every house had formerly, among its other furniture, what was called — a low chair, designed for the ease of sick people, and, occasionally, occupied by lazy ones. Of these conveniencies I have seen many, though, perhaps, at present they are wholly disused. STEEVENS.

'twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit: Have you not?

FROTH. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for winter.

CLO. Why, very well then;—I hope here be truths.

ANG. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave, And leave you to the hearing of the cause; Hoping, you'll find good cause to whip them all.

ESCAL. I think no less: Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit ANGELO.

Now, fir, come on: What was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

CLO. Once, fir? there was nothing done to her once.

ELB. I beseech you, fir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

CLO. I beseech your honour, ask me.

ESCAL. Well, fir; What did this gentleman to her?

CLO. I beseech you, fir, look in this gentleman's face: — Good master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose: Doth your honour mark his face?

ESCAL. Ay, fir, very well.

CLO. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

ESCAL. Well, I do so.

CLO. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

ESCAL. Why, no.

CLO. I'll be supposed <sup>a</sup> upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him: Good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master <sup>a</sup> I'll be supposed—] He means deposed. MALONE.

Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

ESCAL. He's in the right: Constable, what say you to it?

ELB. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

CLO. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

ELB. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet: the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

CLO. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

ESCAL. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity?<sup>3</sup> — Is this true?

ELB. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal!<sup>4</sup> I respected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer:—Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

<sup>3</sup> Justice, or Iniquity?] These were, I suppose, two personages well known to the audience by their frequent appearance in the old moralities. The words, therefore, at that time produced a combination of ideas, which they have now lost. JOHNSON.

Justice, or Iniquity? i. e. The Constable or the Fool. Escalus calls the latter Iniquity, in allusion to the old Vice, a familiar character, in the ancient moralities and dumb-shews. Justice may have a similar allusion, which I am unable to explain. Iniquitie is one of the personages in the "Worthy interlude of Kynge Darius," 4to. bl. l. no date. And in the First Part of King Henry IV. Prince Henry calls Falstaff, — "that reverend Vice, that grey Iniquity." RITSON.

JOHNSON.

ESCAL. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

ELB. Marry, I thank your good worship for it: What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

ESCAL. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

ELB. Marry, I thank your worship for it:—Thou feest, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee; thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.<sup>5</sup>

ESCAL. Where were you born, friend? [To FROTH.

FROTH. Here in Vienna, fir.

ESCAL. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

FROTH. Yes, and't please you, fir.

ESCAL. So. — What trade are you of, fir?

[To the Clown.

CLO. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

ESCAL. Your mistress's name?

CLO. Mistress Over-done.

ESCAL. Hath she had any more than one husband?

CLO. Nine, fir; Over-done by the last.

ESCAL. Nine! — Come hither to me, master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters; they will draw you,<sup>6</sup> master <sup>5</sup> — thou art to continue.] Perhaps Elbow, misinterpreting the language of Escalus, supposes the Clown is to continue in confinement; at least, he conceives some severe punishment or other to be implied by the word — continue. STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — they will draw you,] Draw has here a cluster of senses. As it refers to the tapster, it signifies to drain, to empty; as it is Froth, and you will hang them: Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

FROTH. I thank your worship: For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

ESCAL. Well; no more of it, master Froth: farewell. [Exit FROTH.]—Come you hither to me, master tapster; what's your name, master tapster?

CLO. Pompey.<sup>6</sup>

ESCAL. What else?

CLO. Bum, sir.

ESCAL. 'Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you;<sup>7</sup> so that, in the beastliest sence, you are related to hang, it means to be conveyed to execution on a hurdle. In Froth's answer, it is the same as to bring along by some motive or power. JOHNSON.

Again, in Tyro's Roaring Megge, 1598:

"Tyro's round breeches have a cliffe behind."

STEEVENS.

Harrison, in his Description of Britain, prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle, condemns the excess of apparel amongst his countrymen, and thus proceeds: "Neither can we be more justly burdened with any reproche than inordinate behaviour in apparell, for which most nations deride us; as also for that we men doe seeme to bestowe most cost upon our arses, and much more than upon all the rest of our bodies, as women do likewise upon their heads and shoulders." Should any curious reader wish for more information upon this subject, he is referred to "Strutt's Manners and Customs of the English," Vol. III. p. 86. DOUCE.

But perhaps an ancient MS. ballad, entitled, A lamentable complaint of the pore country men againste great hose, for the losse of there cattelles taites, Mus. Brit. MS. Harl. 367. may throw further light on the subject. This ballad consists of 41 stanzas. From these the following are selected.

Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster.

5. " For proude and paynted parragenns,
" And monstrous breched beares,
" This realme almost hath cleane distroy'd,
" Which I reporte with teares. —
9. " And chesely those of eache degree
" Who monstrous hose delyght,
" As monsters fell, have done to us
" Most grevus hurte and spyte. — 11. " As now of late in lesser thinges
" To furnyshe forthe theare pryde,
" With woole, with flaxe, with hare also,
" To make theare bryches wyde.
12. " What hurte and damage doth ensue
" And fall upon the poore,
" For want of woll and flax of late
" Which monstrous hose devore. — 14. " But heare hath so possessed of late
" The bryche of every knave,
" That none one beast nor horse can tell
" Which waye his tale to saufe. —
23. " And that with speede to take awaye
" Great bryches as the cause
" Of all this hurte, or calse to make " Some sharpe and houlsome lawes, — 39. " So that in fyne the charytie
" Whiche Chrysten men shoulde save,
" By dyvers wayes is blemyshe,
" To boulster breaches brave.
40. " But now for that noe remedye
" As yet cann wel be founde,
" I wolde that suche as weare this heare
" Weare well and trewly bounde, 41. " With every heare a louse to have,
" To stufte their bryches oute;
" And then I trust they wolde not weare
" Nor beare suche baggs about."

Finis.

Are you not? come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you.

CLO. Truly, fir, I am a poor fellow, that would live.

ESCAL. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

CLO. If the law would allow it, fir.

ESCAL. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

CLO. Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth in the city?

ESCAL. No, Pompey.

CLO. Truly, fir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then: If your worship will take order <sup>7</sup> for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

ESCAL. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

CLO. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. If this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it, after three pence a bay: <sup>8</sup> If you live to see this come to pass, say, Pompey told you so.

In consequence of a diligent inspection of ancient pictures and prints, it may be pronounced that this ridiculous fashion appeared in the early part of queen Elizabeth's reign, then declined, and recommenced at the beginning of that of James the First. STEEVENS.

“Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> I'll rent the fairest house in it, after three pence a bay:] A bay of Building is, in many parts of England, a common term, of which the best conception that ever I could obtain, is, that it is the space between the main beams of the roof; so that a barn crossed twice with beams is a barn of three bays. JOHNSON.

ESCAL. Thank you, good Pompey: and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you, — I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever, no, not for dwelling where you do; if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Cæsar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt: so for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

CLO. I thank your worship for your good counsel; but I shall follow it, as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade;
The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade.

[Exit.

ESCAL. Come hither to me, master Elbow; come hither, master constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

ELB. Seven year and a half, fir.

ESCAL. I thought, by your readines<sup>9</sup> in the office, you had continued in it some time: You say, seven years together?

ELB. And a half, fir.

ESCAL. Alas! it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't: Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

" — that by the yearly birth

" The large-bay'd barn doth fill," &c.

I forgot to take down the title of the work from which this instance is adopted. Again, in Hall's Virgidemiarum, Lib. IV:

" His rent in faire response must arise,

" To double trebles of his one yeares price;

" Of one bayes breadth, God wot, a filly cote

" Whose thatched spars are furr'd with fluttish foote."

STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> — by your readines — ] Old copy m the readines. Corrected by Mr. Pope. In the MSS. of our author's age, y<sup>e</sup>. and y<sup>r</sup>. for so they were frequently written) were easily confounded. MALONE.

ELB. Faith, fir, few of any wit in fuch matters : as they are chofen, they are glad to choofe me for them ; I do it for fome piece of money, and go through with all.

ESCAL. Look you, bring me in the names of fome fix or feven, the moft fufficient of your parifh.

ELB. To your worfhip's houfe, fir?

ESCAL. To my houfe: Fare you well. [Exit ELBOW.] What's o'clock, think you?

JUST. Eleven, fir.

ESCAL. I pray you home to dinner with me.

JUST. I humbly thank you.

ESCAL. It grieves me for the death of Claudio ; But there's no remedy.

JUST. Lord Angelo is fevere.

ESCAL. It is but needful :
Mercy is not itfelf, that oft looks fo ;
Pardon is ftill the nurfe of fecond woe :
But yet, — Poor Claudio! — There's no remedy.
Come, fir. [Excunt.]

SCENE II.

Another Room in the fame.

Enter Provost, and a Servant.

SERV. He's hearing of a caufe ; he will come ftaight.

I'll tell him of you.

PROV. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know His pleafure ; may be, he will relent : Alas, He hath but as offended in a dream ! All fects, all ages fmack of this vice ; and he To die for it! —

Enter ANGELO.

ANG. Now, what's the matter, provost?

PROV. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

ANG. Did I not tell thee, yea? hadst thou not order?

Why dost thou ask again?

PROV. Lest I might be too rash:

Under your good correction, I have seen,

When, after execution, judgement hath

Repented o'er his doom.

ANG. Go to; let that be mine:

Do you your office, or give up your place,

And you shall well be spar'd.

PROV. I crave your honour's pardon.—

What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?

She's very near her hour.

ANG. Dispose of her

To some more fitter place; and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

SERV. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd,
Desires access to you.

ANG. Hath he a sister?

PROV. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.

ANG. Well, let her be admitted.

[Exit Servant.]

See you, the fornicatrefs be remov'd;

Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;

There shall be order for it.

Enter LUCIO and ISABELLA.

PROV. Save your honour! <sup>9</sup> [Offering to retire.

ANG. Stay a little while. <sup>2</sup> — [To ISAB.] You are welcome: What's your will?

ISAB. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,
Please but your honour hear me.

ANG. Well; what's your suit?

ISAB. There is a vice, that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war, 'twixt will, and will not. <sup>3</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Save your honour!] Your honour, which is so often repeated in this scene, was in our author's time the usual mode of address to a lord. It had become antiquated after the Restoration; for Sir William D'Avenant in his alteration of this play has substituted your excellence in the room of it. MALONE.

The entrance of Lucio and Isabella should not, perhaps, be made till after Angelo's speech to the Provost, who had only announced a lady, and seems to be detained as a witness to the purity of the deputy's conversation with her. His exit may be fixed with that of Lucio and Isabella. He cannot remain longer, and there is no reason to think he departs before. RITSON.

Stay a little while, is said by Angelo, in answer to the words, "Save your honour;" which denoted the Provost's intention to depart. Isabella uses the same words to Angelo, when she goes out, near the conclusion of this scene. So also, when she offers to retire, on finding her suit ineffectual: "Heaven keep your honour!"

MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> For which I must not plead, but that I am

At war, 'twixt will, and will not.] This is obscure; perhaps it may be mended by reading:

For which I must now plead; but yet I am

At war, 'twixt will, and will not.

Yet and yet are almost undistinguishable in an ancient manuscript.

ANG. Well; the matter?

ISAB. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
And not my brother. <sup>4</sup>

PROV. Heaven give thee moving graces!

ANG. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it!
Why, every fault's condemn'd, ere it be done:
Mine were the very cypher of a function,
To find the faults, <sup>5</sup> whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

ISAB. O just, but severe law!
I had a brother then. — Heaven keep your honour!
[Retiring.]

LUCIO. [To ISAB.] Give't not o'er so: to him
again, intreat him;
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it:
To him, I say.

Yet no alteration is necessary, since the speech is not unintelligible as it now stands. JOHNSON.

For which I must not plead, but that I am

At war, 'twixt will, and will not.] i. e. for which I must not plead, but that there is a conflict in my breast betwixt my affection for my brother, which induces me to plead for him, and my regard to virtue, which forbids me to intercede for one guilty of such a crime; and I find the former more powerful than the latter. MALONE.

And not my brother.] i. e. let his fault be condemned, or extirpated, but let not my brother himself suffer. MALONE.

STEEVENS.

To fine means, I think, to pronounce the fine or sentence of the law, appointed for certain crimes. Mr. Theobald, without necessity, reads find. The repetition is much in our author's manner. MALONE.

Theobald's emendation may be justified by a passage in King Lear:

“ All's not offence that indiscretion finds,

“ And dotage terms so.” STEEVENS.

ISAB. Must he needs die?

ANG. Maiden, no remedy.

ISAB. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.

ANG. I will not do't.

ISAB. But can you, if you would?

ANG. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

ISAB. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong,

If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse <sup>6</sup>
As mine is to him?

ANG. He's sentenc'd; 'tis too late.

LUCIO. You are too cold. [To ISABELLA.

ISAB. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word,
May call it back again: <sup>7</sup> Well believe this, <sup>8</sup>
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slipt like him;
But he, like you, would not have been so stern.

<sup>6</sup> — touch'd with that remorse —] Remorse, in this place, as in many others, signifies pity.

So, in the 5th A& of this play:

“ My sisterly remorse confutes my honour,

“ And I did yield to him.”

Again, in Heywood's Iron Age, 1632:

“ The perfect image of a wretched creature,

“ His speeches beg remorse.”

See Othello, A& III. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> May call it back again ;] The word back was inserted by the editor of the second folio, for the sake of the metre. MALONE.

Surely, it is added for the sake of sense as well as metre. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — Well believe this,] Be thoroughly assured of this.

THEOBALD.

ANG. Pray you, begone.

ISAB. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 'twere to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

LUCIO. Ay, touch him: there's the vein. [Aside.

ANG. Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

ISAB. Alas! alas!

Why, all the souls that were,<sup>9</sup> were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy: How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgement, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>9</sup> — all the souls that were,] This is false divinity. We should read — are. WARBURTON.

I fear, the player, in this instance, is a better divine than the prelate. The souls that WERE, evidently refer to Adam and Eve, whose transgression rendered them obnoxious to the penalty of annihilation, but for the remedy which the author of their being most graciously provided. The learned Bishop, however, is more successful in his next explanation. HENLEY.

Like man new made.] This is a fine thought, and finely expressed. The meaning is, that mercy will add such a grace to your person, that you will appear as amiable as a man come fresh out of the hands of his Creator. WARBURTON.

I rather think the meaning is, You will then change the severity of your present character. In familiar speech, You would be quite another man. JOHNSON.

And mercy then will breathe within your lips,

Like man new made.] You will then appear as tender-hearted and merciful as the first man was in his days of innocence, immediately after his creation. MALONE.

I incline to a different interpretation: — And you, Angelo, will breathe new life into Claudio, as the Creator animated Adam, by "breathing into his nostrils the breath of life." HOLT WHITE.

ANG. Be you content, fair maid;
It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him;—he must die to-morrow.

ISAB. To-morrow? O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him;

He's not prepar'd for death! Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season;<sup>a</sup> shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink
you:

Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.

LUCIO. Ay, well said.

ANG. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:<sup>3</sup>

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first man that did the edict infringe,<sup>4</sup>
Had answer'd for his deed: now, 'tis awake:
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass,<sup>5</sup> that shows what future evils, <sup>3</sup> The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:] Dormiunt aliquando leges, moriuntur nunquam, is a maxim in our law. HOLT WHITE.

<sup>4</sup> If the first man, &c.] The word man has been supplied by the modern editors. I would rather read —

If he, the first, &c. TYRWHITT.

Man was introduced by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

Looks in a glass,] This alludes to the fopperies of the beril, much used at that time by cheats and fortune-tellers to predict by.

WARBURTON.

See Macbeth, A& IV. sc. i.

So again, in Vittoria Corombona, 1612:

"How long have I beheld the devil in chrystal?" STEEVENS.

The beril, which is a kind of crystal, hath a weak tincture of red in it. Among other tricks of astrologers, the discovery of past or future events was supposed to be the consequence of looking into it. See Aubrey's Miscellanies, p. 165. edit. 1721. REED.

Or new — STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> But, where they live, to end.] The old copy reads — But, here they live, to end. Sir Thomas Hanmer substituted ere for here; but where was, I am persuaded, the author's word.

So, in Coriolanus, A& V. sc. v:

“ — but there to end,

“ WHERE he was to begin, and give away

“ The benefit of our levies,” &c.

Again, in Julius Cæsar:

“ And WHERE I did begin, there shall I end.”

The prophecy is not, that future evils should end, ere, or before they are born; or, in other words, that there should be no more evil in the world (as Sir T. Hanmer by his alteration seems to have understood it;) but, that they should end WHERE they began i. e. with the criminal; who being punished for his first offence, could not proceed by successive degrees in wickedness, nor excite others, by his impunity, to vice. So, in the next speech:

“ Lives not to act another.”

It is more likely that a letter should have been omitted at the press, than that one should have been added.

The same mistake has happened in The Merchant of Venice, folio, 1623, p. 173, col. 2: — “ha, ha, here in Genoa.” — instead of — “where? in Genoa?” MALONE.

Dr. Johnson applauds Sir Thomas Hanmer's emendation. I prefer that of Mr. Malone. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all, when I show justice;

For then I pity those I do not know,] This was one of Hale's memorials. When I find myself swayed to mercy, let me remember, that there is a mercy likewise due to the country. JOHNSON.

Which a dismis'd offence would after gall;
 And do him right, that, answering one foul wrong,
 Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
 Your brother dies to-morrow; be content.

ISAB. So you must be the first, that gives this sentence;

And he, that suffers: O, it is excellent
 To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous,
 To use it like a giant.<sup>8</sup>

LUCIO. That's well said.

ISAB. Could great men thunder
 As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
 For every pelting,<sup>9</sup> petty officer,
 Would use his heaven for thunder; nothing but thunder. —

Merciful heaven!

Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
 Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle; —, but man, proud man!<sup>3</sup>

<sup>8</sup> To use it like a giant. ] Isabella alludes to the savage conduct of giants in ancient romances. STEEVENS.

This word I meet with in Mother Bombie, 1594:

“ will not shrink the city for a pelting jade.” STEEVENS.

So, in Antonio's Revenge, 1602:

“ Till by degrees the tough and gnarly trunk

“ Be riv'd in funder.”

Again, in Chaucer's Knight's Tale, Tyrwhitt's edit. v. 1979:

“ With knotty knarry barrein trees old.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> Than the soft myrtle; — O, but man, proud man! ] The defective metre of this line shews that some word was accidentally omitted at the press; probably some additional epithet to man; perhaps weak, — “but man, weak, proud man —” The editor of the second folio, to supply the defect, reads—O, but man, &c. which, like almost all the other emendations of that copy, is the worst and the most improbable that could have been chosen. MALONE.

I am content with the emendation of the second folio, which I conceive to have been made on the authority of some manuscript, or corrected copy. STEEVENS.

Drest in a little brief authority;
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence, — like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; <sup>4</sup> who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal. <sup>5</sup>

LUCIO. O, to him, to him, wench: he will relent;
He's coming; I perceive't.

PROV. Pray heaven she win him!

ISAB. We cannot weigh our brother with ourself: <sup>6</sup>
Great men may jest with saints: 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation.

LUCIO. Thou'rt in the right, girl; more o' that.

Would all themselves laugh mortal.] Mr. Theobald says the meaning of this is, that if they were endowed with our spleens and perishable organs, they would laugh themselves out of immortality; or, as we say in common life, laugh themselves dead; which amounts to this, that if they were mortal, they would not be immortal. Shakspeare meant no such nonsense. By spleens, he meant that peculiar turn of the human mind, that always inclines it to a spiteful, unseasonable mirth. Had the angels that, says Shakspeare, they would laugh themselves out of their immortality, by indulging a passion which does not deserve that prerogative. The ancients thought, that immoderate laughter was caused by the bigness of the spleen. WARBURTON.

<sup>6</sup> We cannot weigh our brother with ourself:] We mortals, proud and foolish, cannot prevail on our passions to weigh or compare our brother, a being of like nature and like frailty, with ourself. We have different names and different judgements for the same faults committed by persons of different condition.

JOHNSON.

The reading of the old copy, ourself, which Dr. Warburton changed to yourself, is supported by a passage in the fifth Act:

“ — If he had so offended,

“ He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself,

“ And not have cut him off.” MALONE.

ISAB. That in the captain's but a cholerick word,
Which in the foldier is flat blasphemy.

LUCIO. Art advis'd o' that? more on't.

ANG. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

ISAB. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top: "Go to your bosom:
Knock there; and ask your heart, what it doth know
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

ANG. She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it.<sup>7</sup>——Fare you well.

<sup>6</sup> That skins the vice o' the top:] Shakspeare is fond of this indelicate metaphor. So, in Hamlet:

"It will but skin and film the ulcerous place." STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> —— that my sense breeds with it.] Thus all the folios. Some later editor has changed breeds to bleeds, and Dr. Warburton blames poor Theobald for recalling the old word, which yet is certainly right. My sense breeds with her sense, that is, new thoughts are stirring in my mind, new conceptions are hatched in my imagination. So we say, to brood over thought. JOHNSON.

Sir William D'Avenant's alteration favours the sense of the old reading — breeds, which Mr. Pope had changed to bleeds.

—— She speaks such sense

As with my reason breeds such images

A she has excellently form'd. — STEEVENS.

I rather think the meaning is, — She delivers her sentiments with such propriety, force, and elegance, that my sensual desires are inflamed by what she says. Sense has been already used in this play with the same signification:

" —— one who never feels

" The wanton stings and motions of the sense."

The word breeds is used nearly in the same sense in The Tempest:

" —— Fair encounter

" Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace

" On that which breeds between them!" MALONE.

ISAB. Gentle my lord, turn back.

ANG. I will bethink me: — Come again to-morrow.

ISAB. Hark, how I'll bribe you: Good my lord, turn back.

ANG. How! bribe me?

ISAB. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share with you.

LUCIO. You had marr'd all else.

ISAB. Not with fond shekels<sup>8</sup> of the tested gold,<sup>9</sup>
Or stones, whose rates are either rich, or poor,
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there,
Ere sun-rise; prayers from preserved souls,<sup>2</sup>

The sentence signifies, Isabella does not utter barren words, but speaks such sense as breeds or produces a consequence in Angelo's mind. Thus truths which generate no conclusion are often termed barren facts. HOLT WHITE.

I understand the passage thus: — Her arguments are enforced with so much good sense, as to increase that stock of sense which I already possess. DOUCE.

<sup>9</sup> — tested gold,] i. e. attested, or marked with the standard stamp. Warburton.

Rather cuppelled, brought to the test, refined. JOHNSON.

All gold that is tested is not marked with the standard stamp. The verb has a different sense, and means tried by the cuppel, which is called by the refiners a test. Vide Harris's Lex. Tech. Voce CUPPELL. SIR J. HAWKINS.

So, in The Amorous War, 1648:

“ You do not reckon us 'mongst marmalade, “ Quinces and apricots? or take us for “ Ladies preserved?” STEEVENS.

From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

ANG. Well: come to me
To-morrow.

LUCIO. Go to; it is well; away. [Aside to ISABEL.

ISAB. Heaven keep your honour safe!

ANG. Amen: for I
Am that way going to temptation, [Aside.
Where prayers cross.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> — I am that way going to temptation,

Where prayers cross.] Which way Angelo is going to temptation, we begin to perceive; but how prayers cross that way, or cross each other, at that way, more than any other, I do not understand.

Isabella prays that his honour may be safe, meaning only to give him his title: his imagination is caught by the word honour: he feels that his honour is in danger, and therefore, I believe, answers thus:

*I am that way going to temptation,
Which your prayers cross.*

That is, I am tempted to lose that honour of which thou implorest the preservation. The temptation under which I labour is that which thou hast unknowingly thwarted with thy prayer. He uses the same mode of language a few lines lower. Isabella, parting, says:

Save your honour!

Angelo catches the word — Save it! From what?

From thee; even from thy virtue! — JOHNSON.

The best method of illustrating this passage will be to quote a similar one from The Merchant of Venice, Act. III. sc. i:

“Sal. I would it might prove the end of his losses!

“Sola. Let me say Amen betimes, lest the devil cross thy prayer.”

For the same reason Angelo seems to say Amen to Isabella's prayer; but, to make the expression clear, we should read perhaps — Where prayers are crossed. TYRWHITT.

The petition of the Lord's Prayer — “lead us not into temptation” — is here considered as crossing or intercepting the onward way in which Angelo was going; this appointment of his for the morrow's meeting, being a premeditated exposure of himself to temptation, which it was the general object of prayer to thwart.

HENLEY.

ISAB. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

ANG. At any time 'fore noon.

ISAB. Save your honour!

[Exeunt LUCIO, ISABELLA, and Provost.

ANG. From thee; even from thy virtue!—
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault, or mine?
The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Ha! <sup>4</sup>
Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I,
That lying by the violet, in the sun, <sup>5</sup>
Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? <sup>6</sup> Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,

<sup>4</sup> ——— Ha!] This tragedy — Ha! (which clogs the metre) was certainly thrown in by the player editors. STEEVENS.

That lying by the violet, in the sun, &c.] I am not corrupted by her, but my own heart, which excites foul desires under the same benign influences that exalt her purity, as the carrion grows putrid by those beams which increase the fragrance of the violet. JOHNSON,

That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness?] So, in Promos and Cassandra, 1578:

“ I do protest her modest wordes hath wrought in me a maze,

“ Though she be faire, she is not deackt with garish shewes for gaze.

“ Hir bewtie lures, her lookes cut off fond suits with chaste disdain.

“ O God, I feele a sodaine change, that doth my freedome chayne.

“ What didst thou say? he, Promos he, &c. STEEVENS.

Sense has in this passage the same signification as in that above “ — that my sense breeds with it. ” MALONE.

And pitch our evils there? <sup>6</sup> O, fie, fie, fie!
 What dost thou? or what art thou, Angelo?
 Dost thou desire her foully, for those things
 That make her good? O, let her brother live:
 Thieves for their robbery have authority,
 When judges steal themselves. What? do I love
 her,

That I desire to hear her speak again,
 And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream on?
 O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
 With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
 Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
 To sin in loving virtue: never could the strumpet,
 With all her double vigour, art, and nature,
 Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid

<sup>6</sup> And pitch our evils there? ] So, in King Henry VIII:

Neither of these passages appears to contain a very elegant allusion.

Evils, in the present instance, undoubtedly stand for foricæ. Dr. Farmer assures me he has seen the word evil used in this sense by our ancient writers; and it appears from Harrington's Metamorphosis of Ajax, &c. that privies were originally so ill-contrived, even in royal palaces, as to deserve the title of evils or nuisances.

STEEVENS.

One of Sir John Berkenhead's queries confirms the foregoing observation:

“Whether, ever since the House of Commons has been locked up, the speaker's chair has not been a close-stool?”

“Whether it is not seasonable to stop the nose of my evil?”

TWO CENTURIES OF PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD, 8vo. no date.

MALONE.

No language could more forcibly express the aggravated profligacy of Angelo's passion, which the purity of Isabella but served the more to inflame. — The desecration of edifices devoted to religion, by converting them to the most abject purposes of nature, was an eastern method of expressing contempt. See 2 Kings, x. 27.

HENLEY.

S C E N E III.

A Room in a Prison.

Enter DUKE, habited like a Friar, and Provost.

DUKE. Hail to you, provost! so, I think you are.
 PROV. I am the provost: What's your will, good friar?

DUKE. Bound by my charity, and my blest order,
 I come to visit the afflicted spirits
 Here in the prison:<sup>8</sup> do me the common right
 To let me see them; and to make me know
 The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
 To them accordingly.

PROV. I would do more than that, if more were needful.

Enter JULIET.

Look, here comes one; a gentlewoman of mine,
 Who falling in the flames of her own youth,
 Hath blister'd her report:<sup>9</sup> She is with child;

<sup>7</sup> — I smil'd, and wonder'd how.] As a day must now intervene between this conference of Isabella with Angelo, and the next, the act might more properly end here; and here, in my opinion, it was ended by the poet. JOHNSON.

<sup>8</sup> I come to visit the afflicted spirits

Here in the prison:] This is a scriptural expression, very suitable to the grave character which the Duke assumes. "By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." 1 Pet. iii. 19. WHALLEY.

Hath blister'd her report:] The old copy reads — flaws. STEEVENS.

And he that got it, sentenc'd: a young man
More fit to do another such offence,
Than die for this.

DUKE. When must he die?

PROV. As I do think, to-morrow.—
I have provided for you; stay a while, [To JULIET.
And you shall be conducted.

DUKE. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Who doth not see that the integrity of the metaphor requires
we should read:

— flames of her own youth? WARBURTON.

Who does, not see that, upon such principles, there is no end of correction? JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson did not know, nor perhaps Dr. Warburton either, that Sir William D'Avenant reads flames instead of flaws in his Law against Lovers, a play almost literally taken from Measure for Measure, and Much ado about Nothing. FARMER.

Shakspeare has flaming youth in Hamlet; and Greene, in his Never too Late, 1616, says — "he measured the flames of youth by his own dead cinders." Blister'd her report, is disfigur'd her fame.
Blister seems to have reference to the flames mentioned in the preceding line. A similar use of this word occurs in Hamlet:

" — takes the rose

" From the fair forehead of an innocent love,

" And sets a blister there." STEEVENS.

In support of this emendation, it should be remembered, that flawes (for so it was anciently spelled) and flames differ only by a letter that is very frequently mistaken at the press. The same mistake is found in Macbeth, A& II. sc. i. edit. 1623:

" — my steps, which may they walk," — instead of — which way. Again, in this play of Measure for Measure, A& V. sc. i. edit. 1623: — "give we your hand;" instead of me. — In a former scene of the play before us we meet with — "burning youth." Again, in All's Well that ends Well:

" — Yet, in his idle fire,

" To buy his will, it would not seem too dear."

To fall in, (not into) was the language of the time. So, in Cymbeline:

" — almost spent with hunger,

" I am fallen in offence." MALONE.

JULIET. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

DUKE. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,

And try your penitence, if it be found,
Or hollowly put on.

JULIET. I'll gladly learn.

DUKE. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

JULIET. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

DUKE. So then, it seems, your most offenceful act
Was mutually committed?

JULIET. Mutually.

DUKE. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

JULIET. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

DUKE. 'Tis meet so daughter: But lest you do repent,<sup>2</sup>

As that the sin hath brought you to this shame, —
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven;

Showing, we'd not spare heaven,<sup>3</sup> as we love it,
But as we stand in fear, —

“ — But repent you not. ”

But lest you do repent is only a kind of negative imperative — Ne te pœniteat, — and means, repent not on this account. STEEVENS.

I think that a line at least is wanting after the first of the Duke's speech. It would be presumptuous to attempt to replace the words; but the sense, I am persuaded, is easily recoverable out of Juliet's answer. I suppose his advice, in substance, to have been nearly this: “Take care, lest you repent [not so much of your fault, as it is an evil,] as that the sin hath brought you to this shame.” Accordingly, Juliet's answer is explicit to this point:

I do repent me, as it is an evil,

And take the shame with joy. TYRWHITT.

<sup>3</sup> Showing, we'd not spare heaven, ] The modern editors had changed this word into seek. STEEVENS.

JULIET. I do repent me, as it is an evil;
And take the shame with joy.

DUKE. There rest. <sup>4</sup>

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him. —

Grace go with you! Benedicite! <sup>5</sup> [Exit.

JULIET. Must die to-morrow! O, injurious love, <sup>6</sup>

Showing, we'd not spare heaven,] i. e. spare to offend heaven.

<sup>5</sup> Grace go with you! Benedicite!] The former part of this line evidently belongs to Juliet. Benedicite is the Duke's reply.

RITSON.

This regulation is undoubtedly proper: but I suppose Shakspeare to have written, —

Juliet. May grace go with you!

Duke,

Benedicite! STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — O, injurious love,] Her execution was respited on account of her pregnancy, the effects of her love; therefore she calls it injurious; not that it brought her to shame, but that it hindered her freeing herself from it. Is not this all very natural? yet the Oxford editor changes it to injurious law.

JOHNSON.

I know not what circumstance in this play can authorise a supposition that Juliet was respited on account of her pregnancy; as her life was in no danger from the law, the severity of which was exerted only on the seducer. I suppose she means that a parent's love for the child she bears, is injurious, because it makes her careful of her life in her present shameful condition.

Mr. Tollet explains the passage thus: "O, love, that is injurious in expediting Claudio's death, and that respites me a life, which is a burthen to me worse than death!" STEEVENS.

Both Johnson's explanation of this passage, and Steevens's refutation of it, prove the necessity of Hanmer's amendment, which removes every difficulty, and can scarcely be considered as an alteration, the trace of the letters in the words law and love being so nearly alike. — The law affected the life of the man only, not that of the woman; and this is the injury that Juliet complains of, as she wished to die with him. M. MASON.

That respites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!

PROV.

'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

A Room in ANGELO'S House.

Enter ANGELO.<sup>7</sup>

ANG. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects : heaven hath my empty words ;
Whilst my invention,<sup>8</sup> hearing not my tongue,

<sup>7</sup> Enter Angelo.] Promos, in the play already quoted, has likewise a soliloquy previous to the second appearance of Cassandra. It begins thus:

" Do what I can, no reason cooles desire :
" The more I strive my fond affects to tame,
" The hotter (oh) I feele a burning fire
" Within my breast, vaine thoughts to forge and frame," &c.
STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> Whilst my invention,] Nothing can be either plainer or exacter than this expression. [Dr. Warburton means — intention, a word substituted by himself.] But the old blundering folio having it, invention, this was enough for Mr. Theobald to prefer authority to sense. WARBURTON.

Intention (if it be the true reading) has, in this instance more than its common meaning, and signifies eagerness of desire.

So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor:

" ——— course o'er my exteriors, with such greediness of intention."
By invention, however, I believe the poet means imagination.

STEEVENS.

So, in our author's 103d sonnet :

" ——— a face,
" That overgoes my blunt invention quite."

Again, in King Henry V:

" O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
" The brightest heaven of invention !" MALONE.

Steevens says that intention, in this place, means eagerness of desire ; — but I believe it means attention only, a sense in which the

 Could I, with boot, <sup>3</sup> change for an idle plume,
 Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form! <sup>4</sup> word is frequently used by Shakspeare and the other writers of his time. — Angelo says, he thinks and prays to several subjects; that Heaven has his prayers, but his thoughts are fixed on Ifabel. — So, in Hamlet, the King says:

“ My words fly up, my thoughts remain below:

“ Words, without thoughts, never to Heaven go.”

M. MASON.

<sup>9</sup> Anchors on Ifabel:] We have the same singular expression in Antony and Cleopatra:

“ There would he anchor his aspect, and die

“ With looking on his life.” MALONE.

The same phrase occurs again in Cymbeline:

“ Posthumus anchors upon Imogen.” STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> Grown fear'd and tedious;] We should read feared. i. e. old. So, Shakspeare uses in the fear, to signify old age. WARBURTON.

I think fear'd may stand. What we go to with reluctance may be said to be fear'd. JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> — with boot,] Boot is profit, advantage, gain. So, in M. Kyffin's translation of The Andria of Terence, 1588: “ You obtained this at my hands, and I went about it while there was any boot.”

Again, in The Pinner of Wakefield, 1599:

“ Then list to me: Saint Andrew be my boot,

“ But I'll raze thy castle to the very ground.” STEEVENS.

Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form! &c.] There is, I believe, no instance in Shakspeare, or any other author, of “ for vain” being used for “ in vain.” Besides; has the air or wind less effect on a feather than on twenty other things? or rather, is not the reverse of this the truth? An idle plume assuredly is not that “ ever-fixed mark,” of which our author speaks elsewhere, “ that looks on tempests, and is never shaken.” The old copy has vaine, in which way a vane or weather-cock was formerly spelt. [See Minshieu's Dict. 1617, in verb. — So also, in Love's

How often dost thou with thy case, ' thy habit,

Labour's Lost, A& IV. sc. i. edit. 1623: "What vaine? what weathercock?" I would therefore read — vane. — I would exchange my gravity, says Angelo, for an idle feather, which being driven along by the wind, serves, to the spectator, for a vane or weathercock. So, in The Winter's Tale:

"I am a feather for each wind that blows."

And in The Merchant of Venice we meet with a kindred thought:

"—— I should be still

"Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind."

The omission of the article is certainly awkward, but not without example. Thus, in King Lear:

"Hot questripts after him met him at gate."

Again, in Coriolanus:

"Go, see him out at gates."

Again, in Titus Andronicus:

"Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:"

Again, in The Winter's Tale:

"Pray heartily, he be at palace!"

Again, in Cymbeline:

"Nor tent, to bottom, that."

The author, however, might have written:

—— an idle plume,

Which the air beats for vane o' the place. — O form,

How often dost thou — &c.

The pronoun thou, referring to only one antecedent, appears to me strongly to support such a regulation. MALONE.

I adhere to the old reading. — As fair is known to have been repeatedly used by Shakspeare, Marston, &c. for fairness, vain might have been employed on the present occasion, instead of vanity. Pure is also substituted for purity in England's Helicon. See likewise notes on The Midsummer Night's Dream, A& I. sc. i. and The Comedy of Errors, A& II. sc. i. Again, in Love's Labour's Lost, foul is given, as a substantive, to express foulness.

The air is represented by Angelo as chastising the plume for being vain. A feather is exhibited by many writers as the emblem of vanity. Shakspeare himself, in K. Henry VIII. mentions fool and feather, as congenial objects.

That the air beats the plume for its vainness, is a supposition fanciful enough; and yet it may be parallel'd by an image in K. Edward III. 1599, where flags are made the assailants, and "cuff the air, and beat the wind" that struggles to kiss them.

The pronoun thou, referring to the double antecedents place and form, ought to be no objection, for, a little further on, the Duke says:

Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
 To thy false seeming? <sup>6</sup> Blood, thou still art blood: <sup>7</sup>
 Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,
 'Tis not the devil's crest. <sup>8</sup>

" O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
 " Are stuck upon thee."

We have all heard of Town-bulls, Town-halls, Town-clocks, and Town-tops; but the vane o' the place (meaning a thing of general property, and proverbially distinct from private ownership) is, to me at least, an idea which no example has hitherto countenanced.— I may add, that the plume could be no longer idle, if it served as an index to the wind: — and with whatever propriety the vane in some petty market-town might be distinguished, can we conceive there was only a single weathercock in so large a city as Vienna, where the scene of this comedy is laid? STEEVENS.

 To thy false seeming?* ] Here Shakspeare judiciously distinguishes the different operations of high place upon different minds. Fools are frightened, and wise men are allured. Those who cannot judge but by the eye, are easily awed by splendour; those who consider men as well as conditions, are easily persuaded to love the appearance of virtue dignified with power. JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> — Blood, thou still art blood: ] The old copy reads — Blood, thou art blood. Mr. Pope, to supply the syllable wanting to complete the metre, reads — Blood, thou art but blood! But the word now introduced appears to me to agree better with the context, and therefore more likely to have been the author's. — Blood is used here, as in other places, for temperament of body.

MALONE.

 'Tis not the devil's crest.* ] i. e. Let the most wicked thing have but a virtuous pretence, and it shall pass for innocent. This was his conclusion from his preceding words:

— O form!

*How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
 Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
 To thy false seeming? —*

But the Oxford editor makes him conclude just counter to his own premises; by altering it to,

Is't not the devil's crest?

So that, according to this alteration, the reasoning stands thus: — False seeming, wrenches awe from fools, and deceives the wise.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there?

• SERV. One Isabel, a sister.

Desires access to you.

ANG. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.]

O heavens!

Therefore, Let us but write good angel on the devil's horn, (i. e. give him the appearance of an angel;) and what then? Is't not the devil's crest? (i. e. he shall be esteemed a devil.) WARBURTON.

I am still inclined to the opinion of the Oxford editor. Angelo, reflecting on the difference between his seeming character, and his real disposition, observes, that he could change his gravity for a plume. He then digresses into an apostrophe, O dignity, how dost thou impose upon the world! then returning to himself, Blood (says he) thou art but blood, however concealed with appearances and decorations. Title and character do not alter nature, which is still corrupt, however dignified:

Let's write good angel on the devil's horn;

Is't not? — or rather — 'Tis yet the devil's crest.

It may however be understood, according to Dr. Warburton's explanation. O place, how dost thou impose upon the world by false appearances! so much, that if we write good angel on the devil's horn, 'tis not taken any longer to be the devil's crest. In this sense, is an interjected exclamation. JOHNSON.

Blood, thou art but blood!

A Hebrew proverb seems to favour Dr. Johnson's reading:

“ — — — 'Tis yet the devil's crest.”

“ A nettle standing among myrtles, doth notwithstanding retain the name of a nettle.” STEEVENS.

This passage, as it stands, appears to me to be right, and Angelo's reasoning to be this: “ O place! O form! though you wrench awe from fools, and tie even wiser souls to your false seeming, yet you make no alteration in the minds or constitutions of those who possess, or assume you. — Though we should write good angel on the devil's horn, it will not change his nature, so as to give him a right to wear that crest.” It is well known that the crest was formerly chosen either as emblematical of some quality conspicuous in the person who bore it, or as alluding to some remarkable incident of his life; and on this circumstance depends the justness of the present allusion. M. MASON.

It should be remembered, that the devil is usually represented with horns and cloven feet. The old copy appears to me to require no alteration. MALONE.

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart; <sup>2</sup>
 Making both it unable for itself,
 And dispossessing all my other parts
 Of necessary fitness?
 So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
 Come all to help him, and so stop the air
 By which he should revive: and even so
 The general, subject to a well-wish'd king, <sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> ——— to my heart;] Of this speech there is no other trace in Promos and Cassandra, than the following:

“ Both hope and drede, at once my harte doth tuch.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,] The later editions have — “ subjects;” but the old copies read:

The general subject to a well-wish'd king. —

The general subject seems a harsh expression, but general subjects has no sense at all, and general was, in our author's time, a word for people; so that the general is the people, or multitude, subject to a king. So, in Hamlet: “ The play pleased not the million: 'twas caviare to the general: ” JOHNSON.

Mr. Malone observes, that the use of this phrase “ the general, ” for the people, continued so late as to the time of Lord Clarendon:— “ as rather to be consented to, than that the general should suffer. ” Hist. B. V. p. 530. 8vo. I therefore adhere to the old reading, with only a slight change in the punctuation.

*The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
 Quit, &c.*

i. e. the generality who are subjects, &c.

Twice in Hamlet our author uses subject for subjects:

“ So nightly toils the subject of the land. ” A& I. sc. i.

Again, A& I. sc. ii:

“ The lists and full proportions, all are made

“ Out of his subject. ” ———

The general subject however may mean the subjects in general, So, in As you like it, A& II. sc. vii:

“ Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world. ”

STEEVENS.

So the Duke had before (A& I. sc. ii.) expressed his dislike of popular applause:

“ I'll privily away. I love the people,

“ But do not like to stage me to their eyes.

“ Though it do well, I do not relish well

“ Their loud applause and aves vehement:

Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
 Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
 Must needs appear offence.

Enter ISABELLA.

How now, fair maid?

ISAB. I am come to know your pleasure.

ANG. That you might know it, would much better
 please me,

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

ISAB. Even so? — Heaven keep your honour!
[Retiring.]

ANG. Yet may he live a while; and, it may be,
 As long as you, or I: Yet he must die.

ISAB. Under your sentence?

“Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
 “That does affect it.”

I cannot help thinking that Shakspeare, in these two passages, intended to flatter the unkingly weakness of James the First, which made him so impatient of the crowds that flocked to see him, especially upon his first coming, that, as some of our historians say, he restrained them by a proclamation. Sir Symonds D'Ewes, in his Memoirs of his own Life, * has a remarkable passage with regard to this humour of James. After taking notice, that the King going to parliament, on the 30th of January, 1620-1, “spake lovingly to the people, and said, God bless ye, God bless ye;” he adds these words, “contrary to his former hasty and passionate custom, which often, in his sudden distemper, would bid a pox or a plague on such as flocked to see him.” TYRWHITT.

Mr. Tyrwhitt's apposite remark might find support, if it needed any, from the following passage in a True Narration of the Entertainment of his Royall Majestie, from the Time of his Departure from Edinbrogh, till his receiving in London, &c. &c. 1603, “— he was faine to publish an inhibition against the inordinate and dayly accessse of peoples comming,” &c. STEEVENS.

* A Manuscript in the British Museum.

ANG. Yea.

ISAB. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer, or shorter, he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not.

ANG. Ha! Fie, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, <sup>4</sup> as to remit
Their sawcy sweetnesss, that do coin heaven's image,
In stamps that are forbid: <sup>5</sup> 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made, <sup>6</sup>
As to put mettle in restrained means, <sup>7</sup>
To make a false one.

<sup>4</sup> ——— that hath from nature stolen

A man already made, ] i. e. that hath killed a man. MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> Their sawcy sweetnesss, that do coin heaven's image

In stamps that are forbid : ] We meet with nearly the same words in King Edward III. a tragedy, 1596, certainly prior to this play:

“ ——— And will your sacred self “ Commit high treason 'gainst the king of heaven,

“ To stamp his image in forbidden metal? ”

These lines are spoken by the countess of Salisbury, whose (chastity like Isabel's) was assailed by her sovereign.

Their sawcy sweetnesss Dr. Warburton interprets, their sawcy indulgence of their appetite. Perhaps it means nearly the same as what is afterwards called sweet uncleanness. MALONE.

Sweetnesss, in the present instance has, I believe, the same sense as — lickerishnesss. STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> Falsely to take away a life true made, ] Falsely is the same with dishonestly, illegally: so false, in the next line but one, is illegal, illegitimate. JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> ——— mettle in restrained means, ] In forbidden moulds. I suspect means not to be the right word, but I cannot find another.

JOHNSON.

I should suppose that our author wrote,

——— in restrained mints,

as the allusion may be still to coining. Sir W. D'Avenant omits the passage. STEEVENS.

Mettle, the reading of the old copy, which was changed to metal by Mr. Theobald, (who has been followed by the subsequent editors,) is supported not only by the general purport of the passage,

ISAB. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.<sup>8</sup>

ANG. Say you so? then I shall poze you quickly.

(in which our author having already illustrated the sentiment he has attributed to Angelo by an allusion to coining, would not give the same image a second time,) but by a similar expression in Timon:

“ — thy father, that poor rag,
 “ Must be thy subject; who in spite put stuff
 “ To some she-beggar, and compounded thee,
 “ Poor rogue hereditary.”

Again, in The Winter's Tale:

“ As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to,
 “ Before her troth-plight.”

The controverted word is found again in the same sense in Macbeth:

“ — thy undaunted mettle should compose “ Nothing but males.”

Again, in K. Richard II:

“ — that bed, that womb,
 “ That mettle, that self mould that fashion'd thee,
 “ Made him a man.”

Again, in Timon of Athens:

“ — Common mother, thou,
 “ Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
 “ Teems and feeds all; whose self-same mettle,
 “ Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
 “ Engenders the black toad,” &c.

Means is here used for medium, or object, and the sense of the whole is this: 'Tis as easy wickedly to deprive a man born in wedlock of life, as to have unlawful commerce with a maid, in order to give life to an illegitimate child. The thought is simply, that murder is as easy as fornication; and the inference which Angelo would draw, is, that it is as improper to pardon the latter as the former. The words — to make a false one — evidently referring to life, shew that the preceding line is to be understood in a natural, and not in a metaphorical, sense. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.] I would have it considered, whether the train of the discourse does not rather require Isabel to say:

'Tis so set down in earth, but not in heaven.

When she has said this, Then, says Angelo, I shall poze you quickly. Would you, who, for the present purpose, declare your brother's crime to be less in the sight of heaven, than the law has made it; would you commit that crime, light as it is, to save your brother's life? To this she answers, not very plainly in either reading, but more appositely to that which I propose:

I had rather give my body than my soul. JOHNSON,

Which had you rather, That the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,<sup>8</sup>
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness,
As she that he hath stain'd?

ISAB. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul?<sup>9</sup>

ANG. I talk not of your soul; Our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than accompt.<sup>2</sup>

ISAB. How say you?

ANG. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this; —
I, now the voice of the recorded law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:

What you have stated is undoubtedly the divine law: murder and fornication are both forbid by the canon of scripture; — but on earth the latter offence is considered as less heinous than the former.
MALONE.

So, in King John:

“ Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
“ And so doth yours.” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — or, to redeem him,] The old copy has—and to redeem him.
The emendation was made by Sir William D'Avenant. MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> I had rather give my body than my soul.] Isabel, I believe, uses the words, “ give my body,” in a different sense from that in which they had been employed by Angelo. She means, I think, I had rather die, than forfeit my eternal happiness by the prostitution of my person. MALONE.

She may mean — I had rather give up my body to imprisonment, than my soul to perdition. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — Our compell'd sins

Stand more for number than accompt.] Actions to which we are compelled, however numerous, are not imputed to us by heaven as crimes. If you cannot save your brother but by the loss of your chastity, it is not 'a voluntary but compelled sin, for which you cannot be accountable. MALONE.

The old copy reads —

“ Stand more for number than for accompt.”

I have omitted the second for, which had been casually repeated by the compositor. STEEVENS.

Might there not be a charity in sin,
To save this brother's life?

ISAB. Please you to do't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is not sin at all, but charity.

ANG. Pleas'd you to do't, at peril of your soul,
Were equal poize of sin and charity.

ISAB. That I do beg his life, if it be sin,
Heaven, let me bear it! you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your, answer. <sup>4</sup>

ANG. Nay, but hear me:
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or seem so, craftily; <sup>5</sup> and that's not good.

ISAB. Let me be ignorant, <sup>6</sup> and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

<sup>3</sup> Pleas'd you to do't, at peril, &c.] The reasoning is thus: Angelo asks, whether there might not be a charity in sin to save this brother. Isabella answers, that if Angelo will save him, she will stake her soul that it were charity, not sin. Angelo replies, that if Isabella would save him at the hazard of her soul, it would be not indeed no sin, but a sin to which the charity would be equivalent. JOHNSON.

And nothing of yours, answer.
You, and whatever is yours, be exempt from penalty. JOHNSON.*

And nothing of your answer, means, and make no part of those sins for which you shall be called to answer. STEEVENS.

This passage would be clear, I think, if it were pointed thus:

To have it added to the faults of mine,

And nothing of your, answer.

So that the substantive answer may be understood to be joined in construction with mine as well as your. The faults of mine answer are the faults which I am to answer for. TYRWHITT.

ANG. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright,
When it doth tax itself: as these black masks
Proclaim an enshield beauty<sup>6</sup> ten times louder

— as these black masks

Proclaim an enshield beauty, &c.

This should be written en-shell'd, or in-shell'd, as it is in Coriolanus, A& IV. sc. vi:

“ Thrusts forth his horns again into the world

“ That were in-shell'd when Marcius stood for Rome.”

These Masks must mean, I think, the Masks of the audience; however improperly a compliment to them is put into the mouth of Angelo. As Shakspeare would hardly have been guilty of such an indecorum to flatter a common audience, I think this passage affords ground for supposing that the play was written to be acted at court. Some strokes of particular flattery to the King I have already pointed out; and there are several other general reflections, in the character of the Duke especially, which seem calculated for the royal ear.

I do not think so well of the conjecture in the latter part of this note, as I did some years ago; and therefore I should wish to withdraw it. Not that I am inclined to adopt the idea of Mr. Ritson, as I see no ground for supposing that Isabella had any mask in her hand. My notion at present is, that the phrase these black masks signifies nothing more than black masks; according to an old idiom of our language, by which the demonstrative pronoun is put for the prepositive article. See the Glossary to Chaucer, edit. 1775; This, Thise. Shakspeare seems to have used the same idiom not only in the passage quoted by Mr. Steevens from Romeo and Juliet, but also in King Henry IV. Part I. A& I. sc. iii:

“ — and, but for these vile guns,

“ He would himself have been a soldier.”

With respect to the former part of this note, though Mr. Ritson has told us that “enshield is CERTAINLY put by contraction for enshielded,” I have no objection to leaving my conjecture in its place, till some authority is produced for such an usage of enshield or enshielded. TYRWHITT.

There are instances of a similar contraction or elision, in our author's plays. Thus, bloat for bloated, ballast for ballasted, and waft for wafted, with many others. RITSON.

Sir William D'Avenant reads — as a black mask; but I am afraid

Than beauty could displayed. — But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.

ISAB. So.

ANG. And his offence is so, as it appears Accountant to the law upon that pain.<sup>6</sup>

ISAB. True.

ANG. Admit no other way to save his life,
(As I subscribe not that,<sup>7</sup> nor any other,
But in the loss of question,) that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles

Mr. Tyrwhitt is too well supported in his first supposition, by a passage at the beginning of Romeo and Juliet:

“ These happy masks that kiss fair ladies' brows,

“ Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair.” STEEVENS.

So also, in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion, 1661:

“ Subscribe to his desires. ” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> But in the loss of question, ] The loss of question I do not well understand, and should rather read:

But in the loss of question.

In the agitation, in the discussion of the question. To toss an argument is a common phrase. JOHNSON.

This expression, I believe, means, but in idle supposition, or conversation that tends to nothing, which may therefore, in our author's language, be called the loss of question. Thus, in Coriolanus, A& III. sc. i.:

“ The which shall turn you to no other harm,

“ Than so much loss of time. ”

Question, in Shakspeare, often bears this meaning. So, in his Tarquin and Lucrece:

“ And after supper, long he questioned

“ With modest Lucrece, ” &c. STEEVENS.

Question is used here, as in many other places, for conversation.

MALONE.

Of the all-binding law ; <sup>9</sup> and that there were
 No earthly mean to save him , but that either
 You must lay down the treasures of your body
 To this supposed, or else let him suffer ; <sup>2</sup>
 What would you do ?

ISAB. As much for my poor brother , as myself :
 That is , Were I under the terms of death ,
 The impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies ,
 And strip myself to death , as to a bed
 That longing I have been sick for , ere I'd yield
 My body up to shame.

ANG. Then must your brother die.

ISAB. And 'twere the cheaper way :
 Better it were , a brother died at once , <sup>3</sup>
 Than that a sister , by redeeming him ,
 Should die for ever.

ANG. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
 That you have slander'd so ?

<sup>9</sup> Of the all-binding law ; ] The old editions read :
 ——— all-building law. JOHNSON.

The emendation is Theobald's. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> ——— or else let him suffer ; ] The old copy reads, — “ or else to let him , ” &c. STEEVENS.

Sir Thomas Hanmer reads more grammatically — “ or else let him suffer . ” But our author is frequently inaccurate in the construction of his sentences. I have therefore adhered to the old copy.
You must be under the necessity [ to let , &c. ] must be understood.

So, in Holinshed's History of Scotland, p. 150 : “ — asleep they were so fast , that a man might have removed the chamber over them, sooner than to have awaked them out of their drunken sleep . ”

MALONE.

The old copy reads — supposed, not suppos'd. The second to in the line might therefore be the compositor's accidental repetition of the first. Being unnecessary to sense, and injurious to measure, I have omitted it. — The pages of Holinshed will furnish examples of every blunder to which printed works are liable. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— a brother died at once , ] Perhaps we should read :
Better it were, a brother died for once , &c. JOHNSON.

ISAB. Ignomy in ransom,<sup>4</sup> and free pardon,
Are of two houses: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to foul redemption.

ANG. You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

ISAB. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we'd have, we speak not what we mean:
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

ANG. We are all frail.

ISAB. Else let my brother die,
If not a feodary, but only he,<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Ignomy in ransom,] So the word ignominy was formerly written.
Thus, in Troilus and Cressida, A& V. sc. iii:

"Hence, brother lacquey! ignomy and shame," &c. REED.

Sir William D'Avenant's alteration of these lines may prove a reasonably good comment on them:

"Ignoble ransom no proportion bears

"To pardon freely given." MALONE.

The second folio reads—ignominy; but whichever reading we take, the line will be inharmonious, if not defective. STEEVENS.

If not a feodary, but only he, &c.] This is so obscure, but the allusion so fine, that it deserves to be explained. A feodary was one that in the times of vassalage held lands of the chief lord, under the tenure of paying rent and service: which tenures were called feuda amongst the Goths. Now, says Angelo, "we are all frail;"—"Yes, replies Isabella; if all mankind were not feodaries, who owe what they are to this tenure of imbecility, and who succeed each other by the same tenure, as well as my brother, I would give him up." The comparing mankind, lying under the weight of original sin, to a feodary, who owes suit and service to his lord, is, I think, not ill imagined. WARBURTON.

Shakspeare has the same allusion in Cymbeline:

"——— senseless bauble,

"Art thou a feodarie, for this act?"

Again, in the prologue to Marston's Sophonisba, 1606:

"For seventeen kings were Carthage feodars."

Owe, <sup>6</sup> and succeed by weaknefs. <sup>7</sup>

ANG.

Nay, women are frail too.

ISAB. Ay, as the glaffes where they view themselves;
Which are as eafy broke as they make forms. <sup>8</sup>

Mr. M. Maſon cenſures me for not perceiving that feodary ſignifies an accomplice. Of this I was fully aware, as it ſupports the ſenſe contended for by Warburton, and ſeemingly acquieſced in by Dr. Johnson. — Every vaffal was an accomplice with his lord; i. e. was ſubject to be executor of the miſchief he did not contrive, and was obliged to follow in every bad cauſe which his ſuperior led.

STEEVENS.

I have ſhewn in a note on Cymbeline, that feodary was uſed by Shakspeare in the ſenſe of an affociate, and ſuch undoubtedly is its ſignification here. Dr. Warburton's note therefore is certainly wrong, and ought to be expunged.

After having aſcertained the true meaning of this word, I muſt own, that the remaining part of the paſſage before us is extremely difficult. I would, however, reſtore the original reading thy, and the meaning ſhould ſeem to be this: — We are all frail, ſays Angelo. Yes, replies Iſabella; if he has not one affociate in his crime, if no other perſon own and follow the ſame criminal courſes which you are now purſuing, let my brother ſuffer death.

I think it, however, extremely probable that ſomething is omitted. It is obſervable, that the line “ — Owe, and ſucceed thy weaknefs, ” does not, together with the ſubſequent line. — “ Nay, women are frail too, — make a perfect verſe: from which it may be conjectured that the compoſitor's eye glanced from the word ſucceed to weaknefs in a ſubſequent hemiſtich, and that by this oversight the paſſage is become unintelligible. MALONE.

STEEVENS.

The emendation was made by Mr. Rowe. I am by no means ſatisfied with it. Thy is much more likely to have been printed by miſtake for this, than the word which has been ſubſtituted. Yet this weaknefs and by weaknefs are equally to be underſtood. Sir W. D'Avenant omitted the paſſage in his Law againſt Lovers, probably on account of its difficulty. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> — glaffes —

Which are as eafy broke as they make forms.] Would it not be better to read?

— take forms. JOHNSON.

Women!—Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. <sup>9</sup> Nay, call us ten times frail;
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints. <sup>2</sup>

ANG.

I think it well:

And from this testimony of your own sex,
(Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold;—
I do arrest your words; Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, (as you are well express'd
By all external warrants,) show it now,
By putting on the destin'd livery.

ISAB. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me intreat you speak the former language. <sup>3</sup>

If men mar their own creation, by taking women for their example, they cannot be said to profit much by them.—Isabella is deploring the condition of woman-kind, formed so frail and credulous, that men prove the destruction of the whole sex, by taking advantage of their weakness, and using them for their own purposes. She therefore calls upon Heaven to assist them. This, though obscurely expressed, appears to me to be the meaning of this passage. M. MASON.

Dr. Johnson does not seem to have understood this passage. Isabella certainly does not mean to say that men mar their own creation by taking women for examples. Her meaning is, that men debase their nature by taking advantage of such weak pitiful creatures.—Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> For we are soft as our complexions are,

And credulous to false prints.] i. e. take any impression.

WARBURTON.

So, in Twelfth Night:

“How easy is it for the proper false

“In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!

“Alas! our frailty is the cause, not we;

“For, such as we are made of, such we be.” MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> ——— speak the former language.] Isabella answers to his circumlocutory courtship, that she has but one tongue, she does not

ANG. Plainly conceive, I love you.

ISAB. My brother did love Juliet, and you tell me,
That he shall die for it.

ANG. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

ISAB. I know, your virtue hath a licence in't,<sup>3</sup>
Which seems a little fouler than it is,<sup>4</sup>
To pluck on others.

ANG. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

ISAB. Ha! little honour to be much believ'd,
And most pernicious purpose!—Seeming, seeming!—

I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't:
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or, with an out-stretch'd throat, I'll tell the world
Aloud, what man thou art.

ANG. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unfoil'd name, the austereness of my life, understand this new phrase, and desires him to talk his former language, that is, to talk as he talked before. JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> I know your virtue hath a licence in't,] Alluding to the licences given by ministers to their spies, to go into all-suspected companies, and join in the language of malcontents. Warburton.

I suspect Warburton's interpretation to be more ingenious than just. The obvious meaning is—I know your virtue assumes an air of licentiousness which is not natural to you, on purpose to try me.—Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786. STEEVENS.

“Cas. Renowned lord, you use this speech (I hope) your thrall to trye,

“If otherwise, my brother's life so deare I will not bye.”

“Pro. Fair dame, my outward looks my inward thoughts bewray;

“If you mistrust, to search my harte, would God you had a keye.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — Seeming, seeming!] Hypocrisy, hypocrisy; counterfeit virtue. JOHNSON.

My vouch against you,<sup>6</sup> and my place i'the state,
Will so your accusation over-weigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny.<sup>7</sup> I have begun;
And now I give my sensual race the rein:<sup>8</sup>
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Lay by all nicety, and proluxious blushes,<sup>9</sup>
That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will;
Or else he must not only die the death,<sup>2</sup>

<sup>6</sup> My vouch against you,] The calling his denial of her charge his vouch; has something fine. Vouch is the testimony one man bears for another. So that, by this, he insinuates his authority was so great, that his denial would have the same credit that a vouch or testimony has in ordinary cases. WARBURTON.

I believe this beauty is merely imaginary, and that vouch against means no more than denial. JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> That you shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny.] A metaphor from a lamp or candle extinguished in its own grease. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> And now I give my sensual race the rein:] And now I give my senses the rein, in the race they are now actually running. HEATH.

<sup>9</sup> ——— and proluxious blushes,] The word proluxious is not peculiar to Shakspeare. I find it in Moses his Birth and Miracles, by Drayton:

“Most part by water, more proluxious was,” &c.
Again, in the Dedication to Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is Up, 1598:

“———rarifier of proluxious rough barbarism,” &c.
Again, in Nash's Lenten Stuff, &c. 1599:

“———well known unto them by his proluxious sea-wandering.”
Proluxious blushes mean what Milton has elegantly called

“———sweet reluctant delay.” STEEVENS.
<sup>2</sup> ——— die the death,] This seems to be a solemn phrase for death inflicted by law. So, in A Midsummer Night's Dream;

“Prepare to die the death.” JOHNSON.

It is a phrase taken from scripture, as is observed in a note on The Midsummer Night's Dream. STEEVENS.

The phrase is a good phrase, as Shallow says, but I do not conceive it to be either of legal or scriptural origin. Chaucer uses it frequently. See Cant. Tales, ver. 607.

“They were adradde of him, as of the deth.” ver. 1222.

But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
 To lingering sufferance: answer me to-morrow,
 Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
 I'll prove a tyrant to him: As for you,
 Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.

[Exit.

ISAB. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,

Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
 That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
 Either of condemnation or approof!
 Bidding the law make court'sy to their will;
 Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
 To follow, as it draws! I'll to my brother:
 Though he hath fallen by prompture<sup>3</sup> of the blood,
 Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,<sup>4</sup>
 That had he twenty heads to tender down
 On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
 Before his sister should her body stoop
 To such abhorr'd pollution.
 Then Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
 More than our brother is our chastity.
 I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
 And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.

[Exit.

"The deth he feleth thurgh his herte smite." It seems to have been originally a mistaken translation of the French La Mort.

<sup>3</sup> ——— prompture——] Suggestion, temptation, instigation.

JOHNSON.

<sup>4</sup> ——— such a mind of honour,] This, in Shakspeare's language, may mean, such an honourable mind, as he uses "mind of love," in
The Merchant of Venice, for loving mind. Thus also, in Philaster:

"—— I had thought, thy mind

"Had been of honour." STEEVENS:

ACT III. SCENE I.

A Room in the Prison.

Enter DUKE, CLAUDIO, and Provost.

DUKE. So, then you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

CLAUD. The miserable have no other medicine,
But only hope:

I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

DUKE. Be absolute for death; <sup>6</sup> either death, or life,

Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life,—

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing

That none but fools would keep: <sup>7</sup> a breath thou art, <sup>6</sup> Be absolute for death;] Be determined to die, without any hope of life. Horace, —

“ — The hour which exceeds expectation will be welcome.”

JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> That none but fools would keep:] But this reading is not only contrary to all sense and reason, but to the drift of this moral discourse. The Duke, in his assumed character of a friar, is endeavouring to instil into the condemned prisoner a resignation of mind to his sentence; but the sense of the lines in this reading, is a direct persuasive to suicide; I make no doubt, but the poet wrote,

That none but fools would reck: —

i. e. care for, be anxious about, regret the loss of. So, in the tragedy of Tancred and Gismund, Act IV. sc. iii:

“ — Not that she recks this life.” —

And Shakspeare, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:

“ Recking as little what betideth me.” —

WARBURTON.

The meaning seems plainly this, that none but fools would wish to keep life; or, none but fools would keep it, if choice were allowed.
A sense which, whether true or not, is certainly innocent.

JOHNSON.

(Servile to all the skiey influences,)
 That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,<sup>7</sup>
 Hourly afflict: merely, thou art death's fool;
 For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,
 And yet run'st toward him still:<sup>8</sup> Thou art not noble;

Keep, in this place, I believe, may not signify preserve, but care for. "No lenger for to liven I ne kepe," says Æneas in Chaucer's Dido, Queen of Carthage; and elsewhere: "That I kepe not rehearsed be:" i. e. which I care not to have rehearsed.

Again, in The Knightes Tale, Tyrwhitt's edit. ver. 2240:

"I kepe nought of armes for to yelpe."

Again, in A Mery Jeste of a Man called Howleglass, bl. 1. no date.

"Then the parson bad him remember that he had a foule for to kepe, and he preached and teached to him the use of confession," &c. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens's explanation is confirmed by a passage in The Dutcheffs of Malfy, by Webster, (1623) an author who has frequently imitated Shakspeare, and who perhaps followed him in the present instance:

"Of what is't fools make such vain keeping?

"Sin their conception, their birth weeping;

"Their life a general mist of error;

"Their death a hideous storm of terror."

See the Glossary to Mr. Tyrwhitt's edit. of The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer. v. kepe. MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,] Sir T. Hanmer changed dost to do without necessity or authority. The construction is not, "the skiey influences that do," but, "a breath thou art, that dost," &c. If "Servile to all the skiey influences" be inclosed in a parenthesis, all the difficulty will vanish. PORSON.

<sup>8</sup> ——— merely, thou art death's fool;

For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,

And yet run'st toward him still:] In those old farces called

Moralities, the fool of the piece, in order to show the inevitable approaches of death, is made to employ all his stratagems to avoid him; which, as the matter is ordered, bring the fool at every turn, into his very jaws. So that the representations of these scenes would afford a great deal of good mirth and morals mixed together. And from such circumstances, in the genius of our ancestors' publick diversions, I suppose it was, that the old proverb arose, of being merry and wise. WARBURTON.

For all the accommodations that thou bear'st,
 Are nurs'd by baseness:<sup>9</sup> Thou art by no means valiant;
 For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork

Such another expression as death's fool, occurs in The Honest Lawyer, a comedy, by S. S. 1616:

"Wilt thou be a fool of fate? who can
 "Prevent the destiny decreed for man?"

STEEVENS.

It is observed by the Editor of The Sad Shepherd, 8vo. 1783. p. 154. that the initial letter of Stow's Survey, contains a representation of a struggle between Death and the Fool; the figures of which were most probably copied from those characters as formerly exhibited on the stage. REED.

There are no such characters as Death and the Fool, in any old Morality now extant. They seem to have existed only in the dumb Shows. The two figures in the initial letter of Stow's Survey, 1603, which have been mistaken for these two personages, have no allusion whatever to the stage, being merely one of the set known by the name of Death's Dance, and actually copied from the margin of an old Missal. The scene in the modern pantomime of Harlequin Skeleton, seems to have been suggested by some playhouse tradition of Death and the Fool. RITSON.

<sup>9</sup> Are nurs'd by baseness:] Dr. Warburton is undoubtedly mistaken in supposing that by baseness is meant self-love, here assigned as the motive of all human actions. Shakspeare only meant to observe, that a minute analysis of life at once destroys that splendour which dazzles the imagination. Whatever grandeur can display, or luxury enjoy, is procured by baseness, by offices of which the mind shrinks from the contemplation. All the delicacies of the table may be traced back to the shambles and the dunghill, all magnificence of building was hewn from the quarry, and all the pomp of ornament dug from among the damps and darkness of the mine. JOHNSON.

This is a thought which Shakspeare delights to express.
 So, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"—— our dungy earth alike
 "Feeds man as beast."

Again:

"Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
 "The beggar's nurse, and Cæsar's." STEEVENS.

Of a poor worm: <sup>2</sup> Thy best of rest is sleep,
 And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st
 Thy death, which is no more. <sup>3</sup> Thou art not thyself; <sup>4</sup>
 For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
 That issue out of dust: Happy thou art not:
 For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get:
 And what thou hast, forget'st: Thou art not certain;

Of a poor worm:] Worm is put for any creeping thing or serpent. Shakspeare supposes falsely, but according to the vulgar notion, that a serpent wounds with his tongue, and that his tongue is forked. He confounds reality and fiction; a serpent's tongue is soft, but not forked nor hurtful. If it could hurt, it could not be soft. In A Midsummer Night's Dream he has the same notion:

“ With doubler tongue

“ Than thine, O serpent, never adder stung.” JOHNSON.

Shakspeare mentions the “ adder's fork” in Macbeth; and might have caught this idea from old tapestries or paintings, in which the tongues of serpents and dragons always appear barbed like the point of an arrow. STEEVENS.

And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st

Thy death, which is no more.] Evidently from the following passage of Cicero: “ Habes somnum imaginem mortis, eamque quotidie induis, & dubitas quin sensus in morte nullus sit, cum in ejus simulacro videas esse nullum sensum.” But the Epicurean insinuation is, with great judgement, omitted in the imitation. WARBURTON.

Here Dr. Warburton might have found a sentiment worthy of his animadversion. I cannot without indignation find Shakspeare saying, that death is only sleep, lengthening out his exhortation by a sentence which in the friar is impious, in the reasoner is foolish, and in the poet trite and vulgar. JOHNSON.

This was an oversight in Shakspeare; for in the second scene of the fourth act, the Provost speaks of the desperate Barnardine, as one who regards death only as a drunken sleep. STEEVENS.

I apprehend Shakspeare means to say no more, than that the passage from this life to another is as easy as sleep; a position in which there is surely neither folly nor impiety. MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> Thou art not thyself;] Thou art perpetually repaired and renovated by external assistance, thou subsistest upon foreign matter, and hast no power of producing or continuing thy own being.

JOHNSON.

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,<sup>5</sup>
 After the moon: If thou art rich, thou art poor;
 For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,<sup>6</sup>
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee: Friend hast thou none;
 For thine own bowels, which do call thee fire,
 The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
 Do curse the gout, serpigo,<sup>7</sup> and the rheum,
 For ending thee no sooner: Thou hast nor youth,
 nor age;
 But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
 Dreaming on both:<sup>8</sup> for all thy blessed youth
 Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
 Of palsied eld;<sup>9</sup> and when thou art old, and rich,

<sup>5</sup> — strange effects,] For effects read affects; that is, affections, passions of mind, or disorders of body variously affected. So, in Othello:

"The young affects." JOHNSON.

"Rebellion thus, with paynted vizage brave,

"Leads out poore foules (that knowes not gold from glas)

"Who beares the packe and burthen like the asse."

STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> — serpigo,] The serpigo is a kind of tetter. STEEVENS.

But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,

Dreaming on both:] This is exquisitely imagined. When we are young, we busy ourselves in forming schemes for succeeding time, and miss the gratifications that are before us; when we are old, we amuse the languor of age with the recollection of youthful pleasures or performances; so that our life, of which no part is filled with the business of the present time, resembles our dreams after dinner, when the events of the morning are mingled with the designs of the evening. JOHNSON.

So, in Marston's Dutch Courtesan, 1604:

"Let colder eld their strong objections move."

Thou hast neither heat,<sup>2</sup> affection, limb, nor beauty,<sup>3</sup>
To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this,

Again, in our author's Merry Wives of Windsor:

"The superstitious idle-headed eld."

Gower uses it for age as opposed to youth:

"His elde had turned into youth."

De Confessione Amantis, Lib. V. fol. 106. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> ——— for all thy blessed youth

Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld; and when thou art old, and rich,

Thou hast neither heat, &c.] The drift of this period is to prove, that neither youth nor age can be said to be really enjoyed, which, in poetical language, is, — We have neither youth nor age. But how is this made out? That age is not enjoyed, he proves by recapitulating the infirmities of it, which deprive that period of life of all sense of pleasure. To prove that youth is not enjoyed, he uses these words:

——— for all thy blessed youth

Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld; ———

Out of which, he that can deduce the conclusion, has a better knack at logic than I have. I suppose the poet wrote, ——— For pall'd, thy blazed youth

Becomes assuaged; and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld; ———

i. e. when thy youthful appetite becomes palled, as it will be in the very enjoyment, the blaze of youth is at once assuaged, and thou immediately contractest the infirmities of old age; as particularly the palsy and other nervous disorders, consequent on the inordinate use of sensual pleasures. This is to the purpose; and proves youth is not enjoyed, by shewing the short duration of it.

WARBURTON.

Here again I think Dr. Warburton totally mistaken. Shakspeare declares that man has neither youth nor age; for in youth, which is the happiest time, or which might be the happiest, he commonly wants means to obtain what he could enjoy; he is dependent on palsied eld: must beg alms from the coffers of hoary avarice; and being very niggardly supplied, becomes as aged, looks, like an old man, on happiness which is beyond his reach. And, when he is old and rich, when he has wealth enough for the purchase of all that formerly excited his desires, he has no longer the powers of enjoyment;

——— has neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,

To make his riches pleasant. —

That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
 Lie hid more thousand deaths : <sup>4</sup> yet death we fear,
 That makes these odds all even.

CLAUD. I humbly thank you.
 To sue to live, I find, I seek to die;
 And, seeking death, find life: <sup>5</sup> Let it come on.

I have explained this passage according to the present reading, which may stand without much inconvenience; yet I am willing to persuade my reader, because I have almost persuaded myself, that our author wrote,

— for all thy blasted youth
 Becomes as aged — JOHNSON.

The sentiment contained in these lines, which Dr. Johnson has explained with his usual precision, occurs again in the forged letter that Edmund delivers to his father, as written by Edgar; K. Lear, Act I. sc. ii: "This policy, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them." The words above, printed in italicks, support, I think, the reading of the old copy, — "blessed youth," and shew that any emendation is unnecessary.

MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> — heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,] But how does beauty make riches pleasant? We should read bounty, which completes the sense, and is this; thou hast neither the pleasure of enjoying riches thyself, for thou wantest vigour; nor of seeing it enjoyed by others, for thou wantest bounty. Where the making the want of bounty as inseparable from old age as the want of health, is extremely satirical, though not altogether just. WARBURTON.

I am inclined to believe, that neither man nor woman will have much difficulty to tell how beauty makes riches pleasant. Surely this emendation, though it is elegant and ingenious, is not such as that an opportunity of inserting it should be purchased by declaring ignorance of what every one knows, by confessing insensibility of what every one feels. JOHNSON.

By "heat" and "affection" the poet meant to express appetite, and by "limb" and "beauty" strength. EDWARDS.

 — a thousand deaths: —

The meaning is, not only a thousand deaths, but a thousand deaths besides what have been mentioned. JOHNSON.

<sup>5</sup> To sue to live, I find, I seek to die;
 And, seeking death, find life:] Had the Friar, in reconciling

Enter ISABELLA.

ISAB. What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

PROV. Who's there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome.

DUKE. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

CLAUD. Most holy sir, I thank you.

ISAB. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

PROV. And very welcome. Look, signior, here's your sister.

DUKE. Provost, a word with you.

PROV. As many as you please.

DUKE. Bring them to speak, where I may be conceal'd,

Yet hear them.<sup>6</sup> [Exeunt DUKE and Provost.

CLAUD. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Claudio to death, urged to him the certainty of happiness hereafter, this speech would have been introduced with more propriety; but the Friar says nothing of that subject, and argues more like a philosopher, than a Christian divine. M. MASON.

Mr. M. Mason seems to forget that no actual Friar was the speaker, but the Duke, who might reasonably be supposed to have more of the philosopher than the divine in his composition. STEEVENS.

Bring them to speak, where I may be conceal'd, Yet hear them.] The first copy, published by the players, gives the passage thus:

Bring them to hear me speak, where I may be conceal'd. Perhaps we should read:

Bring me to hear them speak, where I, &c. STEEVENS.

The second folio authorizes the reading in the text. TYRWHITT.

The alterations made in that copy do not deserve the smallest credit. There are undoubted proofs that they were merely arbitrary; and in general they are also extremely injudicious. MALONE.

I am of a different opinion, in which I am joined by Dr. Farmer; and consequently prefer the reading of the second folio to my own attempt at emendation, though Mr. Malone has done me the honour to adopt it. STEEVENS.

ISAB. Why, as all comforts are; most good in deed:<sup>7</sup>
 Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
 Intends you for his swift embassador,
 Where you shall be an everlasting leiger:
 Therefore your best appointment make with speed;
 To-morrow you set on.

<sup>7</sup> — as all comforts are; most good in deed:] If this reading be right, Isabella must mean that she brings something better than words of comfort, she brings an assurance of deeds. This is harsh and constrained, but I know not what better to offer. Sir Thomas Hanmer reads:

— in speed. JOHNSON.

The old copy reads:

Why,

As all comforts are: most good, most good indeede.

I believe the present reading, as explained by Dr. Johnson, is the true one. So, in Macbeth:

"We're yet but young in deed." STEEVENS.

I would point the lines thus:

"Clau. Now, sister, what's the comfort?"

"Isab. Why, as all comforts are, most good. Indeed Lord Angelo," &c.

Indeed is the same as in truth, or truly, the common beginning of speeches in Shakspeare's age. See Charles the First's Trial. The King and Bradshaw seldom say any thing without this preface:

"Truly, Sir—." BLACKSTONE.

Therefore your best appointment—] Leiger is the same with resident. Appointment; preparation; act of fitting, or state of being fitted for any thing. So in old books, we have a knight well appointed; that is, well armed and mounted, or fitted at all points. JOHNSON.

The word leiger is thus used in The Comedy of Look about You, 1600:

"Why do you stay, Sir?—"

"Madam, as leiger to solicit for your absent love."

Again, in Leicester's Commonwealth, "a special man of that hasty king, who was his Ledger, or Agent, in London," &c. STEEVENS.

— your best appointment—] The word appointment, on this occasion, should seem to comprehend confession, communion, and absolution. "Let him (says Escalus) be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation." The King in Hamlet, who was cut off prematurely, and without such preparation, is

CLAUD. Is there no remedy?

ISAB. None, but such remedy, as, to save a head,
To cleave a heart in twain.

CLAUD. But is there any?

ISAB. Yes, brother, you may live;
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.

CLAUD. Perpetual durance?

ISAB. Ay, just, perpetual durance; a restraint,
Though all the world's vastidity<sup>2</sup> you had,
To a determin'd scope.<sup>3</sup>

CLAUD. But in what nature?

ISAB. In such a one as (you consenting to't)
Would bark your honour<sup>4</sup> from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.

CLAUD. Let me know the point.

ISAB. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And fix or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension;

said to be dis-appointed. Appointment, however, may be more simply explained by the following passage in The Antipodes, 1638:

"———your lodging
"Is decently appointed." i. e. prepared, furnished.

STEEVENS.

To a determin'd scope.] A confinement of your mind to one painful idea; to ignominy, of which the remembrance can neither be suppressed nor escaped. JOHNSON.

<sup>4</sup> Would bark your honour——] A metaphor from stripping trees of their bark. DOUCE.

And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.<sup>5</sup>

CLAUD. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowery tenderneſs? If I muſt die,
I will encounter darkneſs as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.<sup>6</sup>

ISAB. There ſpake my brother; there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice! Yes, thou muſt die:
Thou art too noble to conſerve a life
In baſe appliances. This outward-fainted deputy, —
Whoſe ſettled viſage and deliberate word
Nips youth i'the head, and follies doth enmew,<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> — the poor beetle, &c.] The reaſoning is, that death is no more than every being muſt ſuffer, though the dread of it is peculiar to man; or perhaps, that we are inconfiſtent with ourſelves, when we ſo much dread that which we careleſſly inflict on other creatures, that feel the pain as acutely as we. JOHNSON.

The meaning is—fear is the principal ſenſation in death, which has no pain; and the giant when he dies feels no greater pain than the beetle.—This paſſage, however, from its arrangement, is liable to an oppoſite conſtruction, but which would totally deſtroy the illuſtration of the ſentiment. DOUCE.

<sup>6</sup> I will encounter darkneſs as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.] So, in the firſt part of Jeronimo, or The Spaniſh Tragedy, 1605:

“ ——— night
“ That yawning Beldam, with her jetty ſkin,
“ 'Tis ſhe I hug as mine effeminate bride.”

STEEVENS.

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

“ ——— I will be
“ A bridegroom in my death; and run into't,
“ As to a lover's bed.” MALONE.

As falcon doth the fowl<sup>8</sup>—is yet a devil:
His filth within being cast,<sup>9</sup> he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

CLAUD. The princely Angelo?

ISAB. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
In princely guards!<sup>2</sup> Dost thou think, Claudio, <sup>8</sup> As falcon doth the fowl,] In whose presence the follies of youth are afraid to show themselves, as the fowl is afraid to flutter while the falcon hovers over it.

So, in the Third Part of King Henry VI:

"—— not he that loves him best,
" The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, " Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells."

To enmew is a term in falconry, also used by Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Knight of Malta:

"—— I have seen him scale,
" As if a falcon had run up a train,
" Clashing his warlike pinions, his steel'd cuirass,
" And, at his pitch, enmew the town below him." STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> His filth within being cast,] To cast a pond is to empty it of mud. Mr. Upton reads:

*His pond within being cast, he would appear
A filth as deep as hell.* JOHNSON.

—— princely guards!] The stupid editors, mistaking guards for satellites, (whereas it here signifies lace,) altered priestly, in both places, to princely. Whereas Shakspeare wrote it priestly, as appears from the words themselves:

—— 'Tis the cunning livery of hell.
The damned'st body to invest and cover
With priestly guards.——

In the first place we see that guards here signifies lace, as referring to livery, and as having no sense in the signification of satellites. Now priestly guards means sanctity, which is the sense required. But princely guards means nothing but rich lace, which is a sense the passage will not bear. Angelo, indeed, as deputy, might be called the princely Angelo: but not in this place, where the immediately preceding words of,

This out-ward-sainted deputy,
demand the reading I have restored. WARBURTON.

The first folio has, in both places, prenzie, from which the other folios made princely, and every editor may make what he can. JOHNSON.

If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might'st be freed?

CLAUD. O, heavens! it cannot be.

ISAB. Yes, he would give it thee, from this rank offence,<sup>3</sup>

So to offend him still: This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

CLAUD. Thou shalt not do't.

ISAB. O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.<sup>4</sup>

CLAUD. Thanks, dear Isabel.

ISAB. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Princely is the judicious correction of the second folio. Princely guards mean no more than the badges of royalty, (laced or bordered robes,) which Angelo is supposed to assume during the absence of the Duke. The stupidity of the first editors is sometimes not more injurious to Shakspeare, than the ingenuity of those who succeeded them.

In the old play of Cambyfes I meet with the same expression. Sisamnes is left by Cambyfes to distribute justice while he is absent; and in a soliloquy says:

"Now may I wear the brodered garde,

"And lye in downe-bed soft."

Again, the queen of Cambyfes says:

"I do forsake these broder'd gardes,

"And all the facions new." STEEVENS.

A guard, in old language, meant a welt or border of a garment; "because (says Minshieu) it guards and keeps the garment from tearing." These borders were sometimes of lace. So, in The Merchant of Venice:

"—— Give him a livery

"More guarded than his fellows:" MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> —— from this rank offence,] I believe means, from the time of my committing this offence, you might persist in sinning with safety. The advantages you would derive from my having such a secret of his in my keeping, would ensure you from further harm on account of the same fault, however frequently repeated. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> —— as a pin.] So, in Hamlet:

"I do not set my life at a pin's fee." STEEVENS.

CLAUD. Yes.—Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,
When he would force it?<sup>5</sup> Sure it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.<sup>6</sup>

ISAB. Which is the least?

CLAUD. If it were damnable,<sup>7</sup> he, being so wise,
Why, would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fin'd?<sup>8</sup>—O Isabel!

<sup>5</sup> Has he affections, &c.] Is he actuated by passions that impel him to transgress the law, at the very moment that he is enforcing it against others? [I find, he is.] Surely then, since this is so general a propensity, since the judge is as criminal as he whom he condemns, it is no sin, or at least a venial one. So, in the next Act:

“ A deflower'd maid,
“ And by an eminent body that enforc'd
“ The law against it.”

Force is again used for enforce in King Henry VIII:

“ If you will now unite in your complaints,
“ And force them with a constancy.”

Again, in Coriolanus:

“ Why force you this?” MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> *Or of the deadly seven, &c.] It may be useful to know which they are; the reader is therefore presented with the following catalogue of them, viz. Pride, Envy, Wrath, Sloth; Covetousness, Gluttony, and Lechery. To recapitulate the punishments hereafter for these sins, might have too powerful an effect upon the weak nerves of the present generation; but whoever is desirous of being particularly acquainted with them, may find information in some of the old monkish systems of divinity, and especially in a curious book entitled Le Kalendrier des Bergiers, 1500, folio, of which there is an English translation. DOUCE.*

<sup>7</sup> If it were damnable, &c.] Shakspeare shows his knowledge of human nature in the conduct of Claudio. When Isabella first tells him of Angelo's proposal, he answers, with honest indignation, agreeably to his settled principles,

Thou shalt not do't.

But the love of life being permitted to operate, soon furnishes him with sophistical arguments; he believes it cannot be very dangerous to the soul, since Angelo, who is so wise, will venture it.

JOHNSON.

“ —cables of perdurable toughness.” STEEVENS.

ISAB. What says my brother?

CLAUD. Death is a fearful thing.

ISAB. And shamed life a hateful.

CLAUD. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit<sup>9</sup>
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendant world; or to be worse than worst

<sup>9</sup> — delighted spirit —] i. e. the spirit accustomed here to ease and delights. This was properly urged as an aggravation to the sharpness of the torments spoken of. The Oxford editor not apprehending this, alters it to dilated. As if, because the spirit in the body is said to be imprisoned, it was crowded together likewise; and so by death not only set free, but expanded too; which, if true, would make it the less sensible of pain.

WARBURTON.

This reading may perhaps stand, but many attempts have been made to correct it. The most plausible is that which substitutes

— the benighted spirit, alluding to the darkness always supposed in the place of future punishment.

Perhaps we may read:

— the delinquent spirit.

a word easily changed to delighted by a bad copier, or unskilful reader. Delinquent is proposed by Thirlby in his manuscript.

JOHNSON.

I think with Dr. Warburton, that by the delighted spirit is meant, the soul once accustomed to delight, which of course must render the sufferings, afterwards described, less tolerable. Thus our author calls youth, blessed, in a former scene, before he proceeds to show its wants and its inconveniencies.

Mr. Ritson has furnished me with a passage which I leave to those who can use it for the illustration of the foregoing epithet. "Sir Thomas Herbert, speaking of the death of Mirza, son to Shah Abbas, says that he gave a period to his miseries in this world, by supping a delighted cup of extream poyson." Travels, 1634, p. 104. STEEVENS.

Of those, that lawless and incertain thoughts<sup>2</sup>
 Imagine howling!—'tis too horrible!
 The weariest and most loathed worldly life,
 That age, ach, penury,<sup>3</sup> and imprisonment
 Can lay on nature, is a paradise
 To what we fear of death.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> To what we fear of death.] Most certainly the idea of the "spirit bathing in fiery floods," or of residing "in thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice," is not original to our poet; but I am not sure that they came from the Platonick hell of Virgil. The monks also had their hot and their cold hell; "the fyrste is fyre that ever brenneth, and never gyveth lighte," says an old homily:—"The seconde is passing cold, that yf a greate hylle of fyre were cast therin, it shold torne to yce." One of their legends, well remembered in the time of Shakspeare, gives us a dialogue between a bishop and a soul tormented in a piece of ice which was brought to cure a brenning heate in his foot; take care, that you do not interpret this the gout, for I remember Menage quotes a canon upon us:

"Si quis dixerit episcopum podagrâ laborare, anathema sit."

Another tells us of the soul of a monk fastened to a rock, which the winds were to blow about for a twelvemonth, and purge of its enormities. Indeed this doctrine was before now introduced into poetick fiction, as you may see in a poem, "where the lover declareth his pains to exceed far the pains of hell," among the many miscellaneous ones subjoined to the works of Surrey: of which you will soon have a beautiful edition from the able hand of my friend Dr. Percy. Nay, a very learned and inquisitive brother-antiquary hath observed to me, on the authority of Blefkenius, that this was the ancient opinion of the inhabitants of Iceland, who were certainly very little read either in the poet or philosopher.

FARMER.

Lazarus, in The Shepherd's Calendar, is represented to have seen these particular modes of punishment in the infernal regions:

"Secondly, I have seen in hell a floud frozen as ice, wherein the envious men and women were plunged unto the navel, and then suddainly came over them a right cold and great wind that grieved and pained them right fore, &c. STEEVENS.

ISAB. Alas! alas!

CLAUD. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far,
That it becomes a virtue.

ISAB. O, you beast!
O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, ' to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?

Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderiness<sup>6</sup>
Ne'er issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:<sup>7</sup>
Die; perish! might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

CLAUD. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

ISAB. O, fie, fie, fie!

<sup>5</sup> Is't not a kind of incest,] In Isabella's declamation there is something harsh, and something forced and far-fetched. But her indignation cannot be thought violent, when we consider her not only as a virgin, but as a nun. JOHNSON.

“ And throws an unknown wilderiness about me.”

Again, in Old Fortunatus, 1600:

“ But I in wilderiness totter'd out my youth.”

The word, in this sense, is now obsolete, though employed by Milton:

“ The paths, and bowers, doubt not, but our joint hands

“ Will keep from wilderiness with ease.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> ——— Take my defiance:] Defiance is refusal, So, in Romeo and Juliet:

“ I do defy thy commiseration.” STEEVENS.

'Tis best that thou diest quickly. [Going.

CLAUD.

O hear me, Isabella.

Re-enter DUKE.

DUKE. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.

ISAB. What is your will?

DUKE. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you : the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.

ISAB. I have no superfluous leisure ; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs ; but I will attend you a while.

DUKE. [To CLAUDIO, aside.] Son, I have overheard what hath past between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her ; only he hath made an assay of her virtue, to practise his judgement with the disposition of natures : she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive : I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true ; therefore prepare yourself to death : Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible :<sup>9</sup> to-morrow you must die ; go to your knees, and make ready.

<sup>8</sup> — but a trade : ] A custom ; a practice ; an established habit. So we say of a man much addicted to any thing, he makes a trade of it. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible : ] A condemned man, whom his confessor had brought to bear death with decency and resolution, began anew to entertain hopes of life. This occasioned the advice in the words above. But how did

CLAUD. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

DUKE. Hold you there: <sup>2</sup> Farewell.

[Exit CLAUDIO.]

Re-enter Provost.

Provost, a word with you.

PROV. What's your will, father?

DUKE. That now you are come, you will be gone: Leave me a while with the maid; my mind promises with my habit, no loss shall touch her by my company.

PROV. In good time. <sup>3</sup> Exit Provost.

DUKE. The hand that hath made you fair, hath made you good: the goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, should keep the body of it ever fair. The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that frailty hath examples for these hopes satisfy his resolution? or what harm was there, if they did? We must certainly read, Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible. And then it becomes a reasonable admonition. For hopes of life, by drawing him back into the world, would naturally elude or weaken the virtue of that resolution which was raised only on motives of religion. And this his confessor had reason to warn him of. The term falsify is taken from fencing, and signifies the pretending to aim a stroke, in order to draw the adversary off his guard. So, Fairfax:

“Now strikes he out, and now he falsifieth.” WARBURTON.

The sense is this: —Do not rest with satisfaction on hopes that are fallible. There is no need of alteration. STEEVENS.

Perhaps the meaning is, Do not satisfy or content yourself with that kind of resolution, which acquires strength from a latent hope that it will not be put to the test; a hope, that in your case, if you rely upon it, will deceive you. MALONE.

his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How would you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

ISAB. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

DUKE. That shall not be much amiss: Yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation; he made trial of you only.<sup>4</sup>—Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings; to the love I have in doing good, a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprighteously do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

ISAB. Let me hear you speak further; I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

DUKE. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana the sister of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?

ISAB. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

DUKE. Her should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath,<sup>5</sup> and the nuptial appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity,<sup>6</sup> her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perish'd vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark, how heavily this beset to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combinate husband,<sup>7</sup> this well-seeming Angelo!

ISAB. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

DUKE. Left her in her tears, and dry'd not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending, in her, discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation,<sup>8</sup> which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

ISAB. What a merit were it in death, to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this can she avail?

DUKE. It is a rupture that you may easily heal: and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

ISAB. Show me how, good father.

DUKE. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point: only refer yourself to this advantage,<sup>9</sup>—first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience: this being granted in course, now follows all. We shall advise this wronged maid to steal up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompence: and here, by this is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled.<sup>2</sup> The maid will I frame, and make fit for <sup>9</sup> — only refer yourself to this advantage, ] This is scarcely to be reconciled to any established mode of speech. We may read, only reserve yourself to, or only reserve to yourself this advantage. JOHNSON.

Refer yourself to, merely signifies—have recourse to, betake yourself to, this advantage. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — the corrupt deputy scaled. ] To scale the deputy may be, to reach him, notwithstanding the elevation of his place; or it may be, to strip him and discover his nakedness, though armed and concealed by the investments of authority. JOHNSON.

To scale, as may be learned from a note to Coriolanus, Act I. sc. i. most certainly means, to disorder, to disconcert, to put to flight. An army routed is called by Holinshed, an army scaled. The word sometimes signifies to diffuse or disperse; at others, as I suppose in the present instance, to put into confusion. STEEVENS.

To scale is certainly to reach (as Dr. Johnson explains it) as well as to disperse or spread abroad; and hence its application to a routed army which is scattered over the field. The Duke's meaning appears to be, either that Angelo would be over-reached, as a town is by the scalade, or that his true character would be spread or laid open, so that his villainy would become evident. Dr. Warburton thinks it is weighed, a meaning which Dr. Johnson affixes to the word in another place. See Coriolanus, Act I. sc. i.

Scaled, however, may mean—laid open, as a corrupt sore is by removing the slough that covers it. The allusion is rendered less disgusting, by more elegant language, in Hamlet:

“It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;

“Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,

“Infects unseen.” RITSON.

his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

ISAB. The image of it gives me content already; and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

DUKE. It lies much in your holding up: Haste you speedily to Angelo; if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the moated grange<sup>3</sup> resides this dejected Mariana: At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

ISAB. I thank you for this comfort: Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt severally.]

<sup>3</sup> ——— the moated grange—] A grange is a solitary farm-house. So, in Othello:

“ My house is not a grange.” STEEVENS.

A grange implies some one particular house immediately inferior in rank to a hall, situated at a small distance from the town or village from which it takes its name; as, Hornby grange, Blackwell grange; and is in the neighbourhood simply called The Grange. Originally, perhaps, these buildings were the lord's granary or storehouse, and the residence of his chief bailiff. (Grange, from Granagium, Lat.) RITSON.

A grange, in its original signification, meant a farm-house of a monastery (from grand gerendo), from which it was always at some little distance. One of the monks was usually appointed to inspect the accounts of the farm. He was called the Prior of the Grange; —in barbarous Latin, Grangiarus. Being placed at a distance from the monastery, and not connected with any other buildings, Shakspeare, with his wonted licence, uses it, both here and in Othello, in the sense of a solitary farm-house.

I have since observed that the word was used in the same sense by the contemporary writers. So, in Tarleton's Newes out of Purgatory, printed about the year 1590: “ ——— till my return I would have thee stay at our little graunge house in the country.”

In Lincolnshire they at this day call every lone house that is unconnected with others, a grange. MALONE.

S C E N E I I.

The Street before the Prison.Enter DUKE as a Friar; to him ELBOW, Clown, and Officers.

ELB. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.<sup>4</sup>

DUKE. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

CLO. 'Twas never merry world, since, of two usuries,<sup>5</sup> the merriest was put down, and the worser allow'd by order of law a furr'd gown to keep him warm; and furr'd with fox and lamb-skins too,<sup>6</sup> to

See a note on King Henry IV. Part I. A & II. sc. iv. STEEVENS.

Bastard was raisin-wine. See Minshieu's Dict. in v. and Cole's Latin Dict. 1679. MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> ———since, of two usuries,] Here a satire on usury turns abruptly to a satire on the person of the usurer, without any kind of preparation. We may be assured then, that a line or two, at least, have been lost. The subject of which we may easily discover was a comparison between the two usurers; as, before, between the two usuries. So that, for the future, the passage should be read with asterisks, thus—*by order of law, *** a furr'd gown, &c.* WARBURTON.

Sir Thomas Hanmer corrected this with less pomp, then since of two usurers the merriest was put down, and the worser allowed, by order of law, a furr'd gown, &c. His punctuation is right, but the alteration, small as it is, appears more than was wanted. Usury may be used by an easy licence for the professors of usury. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> ———and furr'd with fox and lamb-skins too, &c.] In this passage the foxes skins are supposed to denote craft, and the lamb-skins innocence. It is evident therefore that we ought to read, "furred with fox on lamb-skins," instead of "and lamb-skins;" for otherwise, craft will not stand for the facing. M. MASON.

Fox-skins and lamb-skins were both used as facings to cloth in Shakspeare's time. See the Statute of Apparel, 24 Henry VIII.

signify, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

ELB. Come your way, fir:—Bless you, good father friar.

DUKE. And you, good brother father: <sup>7</sup> What offence hath this man made you, fir?

ELB. Marry, fir, he hath offended the law; and, fir, we take him to be a thief too, fir; for we have found upon him, fir, a strange pick-lock, <sup>8</sup> which we have sent to the deputy.

DUKE. Fie, firrah; a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou caus'est to be done, That is thy means to live: Do thou but think What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back, From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,— From their abominable and beastly touches

c. 13. Hence fox-furr'd slave is used as an opprobrious epithet in Wily Beguiled, 1606, and in other old comedies. See also Characterismi, or Lenton's Leasures, &c. 1631: "An Usurer is an old fox, clad in lamb-skin, who hath pray'd [prey'd] so long abroad," &c.

MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> ———and you, good brother father:] In return to Elbow's blundering address of good father friar, i. e. good father brother, the Duke humourously calls him, in his own style, good brother father. This would appear still clearer in French. Dieu vous bénisse, mon père frère.—Et vous aussi, mon frère père. There is no doubt that our friar is a corruption of the French frère. TYRWHITT.

Mr. Tyrwhitt's observation is confirmed by a passage in The Strangest Adventure that ever happened, &c. 4to. 1601:

"And I call to mind, that as the reverend father brother, Thomas Sequera, Superiour of Eborā, and mine auncient friend, came to visite me," &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> ———a strange pick-lock,] As we hear no more of this charge, it is necessary to prevent honest Pompey from being taken for a house-breaker. The locks which he had occasion to pick, were by no means common, in this country at least. They were probably introduced, with other Spanish customs, during the reign of Philip and Mary; and were so well known in Edinburgh, that in one of Sir David Lindsay's plays, represented to thousands in the open air, such a lock is actually opened on the stage. RITSON.

I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
 Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
 So stinkingly depending? Go, mend, go, mend.

CLO. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, fir; but yet, fir, I would prove——

DUKE. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,

Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer;
 Correction and instruction must both work,
 Ere this rude beast will profit.

ELB. He must before the deputy, fir; he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whore-monger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

DUKE. That we were all, as some would seem to be,
 Free from our faults, as faults from seeming, free!<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.] The old editions have,
I drink, I eat away myself, and live.

This is one very excellent instance of the sagacity of our editors, and it were to be wished heartily, that they would have obliged us with their physical solution, how a man can eat away himself, and live. Mr. Bishop gave me that most certain emendation, which I have substituted in the room of the former foolish reading;
 by the help whereof, we have this easy sense: that the Clown fed himself, and put cloaths on his back, by exercising the vile trade of a bawd. THEOBALD.

<sup>2</sup> *That we were all, as some would seem to be,
 Free from our faults, as faults from seeming, free!*] i. e. as faults are destitute of all comeliness or seeming. The first of these lines refers to the deputy's sanctified hypocrisy; the second to the Clown's beastly occupation. But the latter part is thus ill expressed for the sake of the rhyme. WARBURTON.

Sir Thomas Hanmer reads:

Free from all faults, as from faults seeming free.

In the interpretation of Dr. Warburton, the sense is trifling, and the expression harsh. To wish that men were as free from faults, as faults are free from comeliness, [instead of void of comeliness] is a very poor conceit. I once thought it should be read:

O that all were, as all would seem to be,

Free from all faults, or from false seeming free.

Enter LUCIO.

ELB. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir.<sup>3</sup>

So in this play :

“ O , place , O , power—how dost thou

“ Wrench awe from fools , and tie the wiser souls

“ To thy false seeming!”

But now I believe that a less alteration will serve the turn :

Free from all faults , or faults from seeming free.

that men were really good , or that their faults were known , that men were free from faults , or faults from hypocrisy. So Isabella calls Angelo's hypocrisy, seeming, seeming. JOHNSON.

I think we should read with Sir T. Hanmer :

Free from all faults , as from faults seeming free.

i. e. I wish we were all as good as we appear to be; a sentiment very naturally prompted by his reflection on the behaviour of Angelo. Sir T. Hanmer has only transposed a word to produce a convenient sense. STEEVENS.

Hanmer is right with respect to the meaning of this passage , but I think his transposition unnecessary. The words , as they stand , will express the same sense , if pointed thus :

Free from all faults , as , faults from , seeming free.

Nor is this construction more harsh than that of many other sentences in the play , which of all those which Shakspeare has left us , is the most defective in that respect. M. MASON.

The original copy has not Free at the beginning of the line. It was added unnecessarily by the editor of the second folio , who did not perceive that our , like many words of the same kind , was used by Shakspeare as a dissyllable. The reading ,—from all faults , which all the modern editors have adopted , ( I think , improperly , ) was first introduced in the fourth folio. Dr. Johnson's conjectural reading , or , appears to me very probable. The compositor might have caught the word as from the preceding line. If as be right , Dr. Warburton's interpretation is perhaps the true one. Would we were all as free from faults , as faults are free from , or destitute of comeliness , or seeming. This line is rendered harsh and obscure by the word free being dragged from its proper place for the sake of the rhyme. MALONE.

Till I meet with some decisive instance of the pronoun—our , used as a dissyllable , I read with the second folio , which I cannot suspect of capricious alterations. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> His neck will come to your waist , a cord , sir. ] That is , his neck

CLO. I spy comfort; I cry bail: Here's a gentleman, and a friend of mine.

“Variata terga funibus.” JOHNSON.

<sup>4</sup> Pygmalion's images, newly made woman,] By Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, I believe Shakspeare meant no more than—Have you no women now to recommend to your customers, as fresh and untouched as Pygmalion's statue was, at the moment when it became flesh and blood? The passage, may, however, contain some allusion to a pamphlet printed in 1598, called, The Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image, and certain Satires. I have never seen it, but it is mentioned by Ames, p. 568; and whatever its subject might be, we learn from an order signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London, that this book was commanded to be burnt. The order is inserted at the end of the second volume of the entries belonging to the Stationers' Company.

STEEVENS.

If Marston's Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image be alluded to, I believe it must be in the argument.—“The maide (by the power of Venus) was metamorphosed into a living woman.”

FARMER.

There may, however, be an allusion to a passage in Lylly's Woman in the Moone, 1597. The inhabitants of Utopia petition Nature for females, that they may, like other beings, propagate their species. Nature grants their request, and “they draw the curtains from before Nature's shop, where stands an image clad, and some unclad, and they bring forth the cloathed image,” &c.

STEEVENS.

Perhaps the meaning is,—Is there no courtesan, who being newly made woman, i. e. lately debauched, still retains the appearance of chastity, and looks as cold as a statue, to be had, &c.

The following passage in Blurt Master Constable, a comedy, by Middleton; 1602, seems to authorize this interpretation:

“Laz. Are all these women?”

“Imp. No, no, they are half men, and half women.

pocket and extracting it clutch'd? What reply? Ha? What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd i' the last rain? ' Ha? What say'st thou, trot? <sup>6</sup> Is the world as it was, man? Which

" Laz. You apprehend too fast. I mean by women, wives; for wives are no maids, nor are maids women."

Mulier in Latin had precisely the same meaning. MALONE.

A pick-lock had just been found upon the Clown, and therefore without great offence to his morals, it may be presumed that he was likewise a pick-pocket; in which case Pygmalion's images, &c. may mean new-coined money with the Queen's image upon it. DOUCE.

<sup>5</sup> What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd i' the last rain?] Lucio, a prating fop, meets his old friend going to prison, and pours out upon him his impertinent interrogatories, to which when the poor fellow makes no answer, he adds, What reply? ha? what say'st thou to this? tune, matter, and method, — is't not? drown'd i' th' last rain? ha? what say'st thou, trot? &c. It is a common phrase used in low raillery of a man crest-fallen and dejected, that he looks like a drown'd puppy. Lucio, therefore, asks him, whether he was drown'd in the last rain, and therefore cannot speak. JOHNSON.

He rather asks him whether his answer was not drown'd in the last rain, for Pompey returns no answer to any of his questions: or, perhaps, he means to compare Pompey's miserable appearance to a drown'd mouse. So, in K. Henry VI. Part I. Act I. sc. ii:

" Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice."

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — what say'st thou trot?] It should be read, I think, what say'st thou to't? the word trot being seldom, if ever, used to a man.

Old trot or trat, signifies a decrepid old woman, or an old drab, in this sense it is used by Gawin Douglas, Virg. Æn. B. IV:

" Out on the old trat, aged dame or wyffe." GREY.

So, in Wily Beguiled, 1613: "Thou toothless old trot thou." Again, in The Wise Woman of Hogsden, 1638:

" What can this witch, this wizard, or old trot."

Trot, however, sometimes signifies a bawd, So, in Churchyard's Tragicall Discourse of a dolorous Gentlewoman, 1593:

" Awake old trots, that sets young flesh to sale."

Pompey, it should be remembered, is of this profession.

STEEVENS.

Trot, or as it is now often pronounced, honest trout, is a familiar address to a man among the provincial vulgar. JOHNSON.

is the way?<sup>7</sup> Is it sad, and few words? Or how?
The trick of it?

DUKE. Still thus, and thus! still worse!

LUCIO. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress?
Procures she still! Ha?

CLO. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.<sup>8</sup>

LUCIO. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so: Ever your fresh whore, and your powder'd bawd: An unshunn'd consequence; it must be so: Art going to prison, Pompey?

CLO. Yes, faith, sir.

LUCIO. Why 'tis not amiss, Pompey: Farewell:
Go; say, I sent thee thither.<sup>9</sup> For debt, Pompey?
Or how?<sup>2</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Which is the way? ] What is the mode now? JOHNSON.

is grossly called the powdering tub. JOHNSON.

It was so called from the method of cure. See the notes on “ — the tub-fast and the diet ” — in Timon, A& IV. STEEVENS.

the words used by Gloster, in K. Henry VI. P. III. A& V. 1c. vi.:

“ Down, down to hell; and say — I sent thee thither.”

RRED.

<sup>2</sup> — Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey? or how? ]
It should be pointed thus: Go, say I sent thee thither for debt, Pompey; or how — i. e. to hide the ignominy of thy case, say, I sent thee to prison for debt, or whatever other pretence thou fanciest better. The other humourously replies, For being a bawd, for being a bawd, i. e. the true cause is the most honourable. This is in character. WARBURTON.

I do not perceive any necessity for the alteration. Lucio first offers him the use of his name to hide the seeming ignominy of his case; and then very naturally desires to be informed of the true reason why he was ordered into confinement. STEEVENS.

Warburton has taken some pains to amend this passage, which does not require it; and Lucio's subsequent reply to Elbow, shows that his amendment cannot be right. When Lucio advises Pompey

ELB. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

LUCIO. Well, then imprison him : If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 'tis his right : Bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too ; bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey : Commend me to the prison, Pompey : You will turn good husband now, Pompey ; you will keep the house.<sup>3</sup>

CLO. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

LUCIO. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey ; it is not the wear.<sup>4</sup> I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage : if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more : Adieu, trusty Pompey.—Bless you, friar.

DUKE. And you.

LUCIO. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey ? Ha ?

ELB. Come your ways, sir ; come.

CLO. You will not bail me then, sir ?

LUCIO. Then, Pompey ? nor now.<sup>5</sup>—What news abroad, friar ? What news ?

ELB. Come your ways, sir ; come.

LUCIO. Go, — to kennel, Pompey, go :<sup>6</sup> to say he sent him to the prison, and in his next speech desires him to commend him to the prison, he speaks as one who had some interest there, and was well known to the keepers. M. MASON.

<sup>3</sup> — You will turn good husband now, Pompey ; you will keep the house. ] Alluding to the etymology of the word husband.

MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> Then, Pompey ? nor now. ] The meaning, I think, is : I will neither bail thee then, nor now. So again, in this play :

“ More, nor less to others paying ” —. MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> Go, — to kennel, Pompey, go : ] It should be remembered, that Pompey is the common name of a dog, to which allusion is made in the mention of a kennel. JOHNSON.

DUKE. I know none: Can you tell me of any?

LUCIO. Some say, he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: But where is he, think you?

DUKE. I know not where: But wheresoever, I wish him well.

LUCIO. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

DUKE. He does well in't.

LUCIO. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabbed that way, friar.

DUKE. It is too general a vice,<sup>7</sup> and severity must cure it.

LUCIO. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well ally'd: but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: Is it true, think you?

DUKE. How should he be made then?

LUCIO. Some report, a sea-maid spawn'd him:—Some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes:—But it is certain, that when he makes water, his urine is congeal'd ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> It is too general a vice, ] Yes, replies Lucio, the vice is of great kindred; it is well ally'd, &c. As much as to say, Yes, truly, it is general; for the greatest men have it as well as we little folks. A little lower he taxes the Duke personally with it. EDWARDS.

<sup>8</sup> ——— and he is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible. ] In the former editions: —and he is a motion generative; that's infallible.

DUKE. You are pleasant, sir; and speak apace.

LUCIO. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the duke, that is absent, have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

DUKE. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women;<sup>9</sup> he was not inclined that way.

This may be sense; and Lucio, perhaps, may mean, that though Angelo have the organs of generation, yet that he makes no more use of them, than if he were an inanimate puppet. But I rather think our author wrote, — and he is a motion ungenerative, because Lucio again in this very scene says, — this ungenitured agent will unpeople the province with continency. THEOBALD.

A motion generative certainly means a puppet of the masculine gender; a thing that appears to have those powers of which it is not in reality possessed. STEEVENS.

A motion ungenerative is a moving or animated body without the power of generation. RITSON.

<sup>9</sup> — much detected for women;] This appears so like the language of Dogberry, that at first I thought the passage corrupt, and wished to read suspected. But perhaps detected had anciently the same meaning. So in an old collection of Tales, entitled, Wits, Fits, and Fancies, 1595: “— An officer whose daughter was detected of dishonestie, and generally so reported.” — That detected is there used for suspected, and not in the present sense of the word, appears, I think, from the words that follow — and so generally reported, which seem to relate not to a known but suspected fact.

MALONE.

In the Statute 3d Edward First, c. 15. the words gentz rettez de felonie are rendered persons detected of felony, that is, as I conceive, suspected. REED.

Again, in Rich's Adventures of Simonides, 1584, 4to: “— all Rome, detected of inconstancie.” HENDERSON!

Detected, however, may mean, notoriously charged, or guilty. So, in North's translation of Plutarch: “— he only of all other kings in his time was most detected with this vice of lecherie.”

LUCIO. O, fir, you are deceived.

DUKE. 'Tis not possible.

LUCIO. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty;—and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish: <sup>2</sup> the duke had crotchets in him: He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

DUKE. You do him wrong, surely.

LUCIO. Sir, I was an inward of his: <sup>3</sup> A shy fellow

Again, in Howe's Abridgment of Stowe's Chronicle, 1618, p. 363: "in the month of February divers traiterous persons were apprehended, and detected of most wicked conspiracie against his majestie:—the 7th of Sept. certaine of them wicked subjects were indicted," &c. MALONE.

<sup>2</sup> — clack-dish:] The beggars, two or three centuries ago, used to proclaim their want by a wooden-dish with a moveable cover, which they clacked, to shew that their vessel was empty. This appears from a passage quoted on another occasion by Dr. Grey.

Dr. Grey's assertion may be supported by the following passage in an old comedy, called The Family of Love, 1608:

"Can you think I get my living by a bell and a clack-dish?"

"By a bell and a clack-dish? how's that?"

"Why, by begging, fir," &c.

Again, in Henderson's Supplement to Chaucer's Troilus and Cresseid:

"Thus shalt thou go a begging from hous to hous,

"With cuppe and clappir like a Lazarous."

And by a stage direction in the Second Part of K. Edward IV. 1619:

"Enter Mrs. Blague very poorly, begging with her basket and a clap-dish."

There is likewise an old proverb to be found in Ray's Collection, which alludes to the same custom:

"He claps his dish at a wrong man's door." STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — an inward of his:] Inward is intimate. So, in Daniel's Hymen's Triumph, 1623:

"You two were wont to be most inward friends."

Again, in Marston's Malcontent, 1604:

"Come we must be inward, thou and I all one."

STEEVENS.

was the duke : <sup>4</sup> and , I believe , I know the cause of his withdrawing.

DUKE. What , I pr'ythee , might be the cause ?

LUCIO. No,—pardon ; —'tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips : but this I can let you understand,—The greater file of the subject<sup>5</sup> held the duke to be wise.

DUKE. Wife ? why , no question but he was.

LUCIO. A very superficial , ignorant , unweighing<sup>6</sup> fellow.

DUKE. Either this is envy in you , folly , or mistaking ; the very stream of his life , and the business he hath helmed,<sup>7</sup> must , upon a warranted need , give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testified in his own bringings forth , and he shall appear to the envious , a scholar , a statesman , and a soldier : Therefore , you speak unskilfully ; or , if your knowledge be more , it is much darken'd in your malice.

LUCIO. Sir , I know him , and I love him.

DUKE. Love talks with better knowledge , and knowledge with dearer love.

<sup>4</sup> — A shy fellow was the duke : ] The meaning of this term may be best explained by the following lines in the fifth Act :

“ The wicked'st caitiff on the ground ,

“ May seem as shy , as grave , as just , as absolute , ” &c.

MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> The greater file of the subject — ] The larger list , the greater number. JOHNSON.

So , in Macbeth :

“ — the valued file . ” STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — unweighing — ] i. e. inconsiderate. So , in The Merry Wives of Windsor : “ What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pick'd out of my conversation , ” &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> — the business he hath helmed , ] The difficulties he hath steer'd through . A metaphor from navigation. STEEVENS.

LUCIO. Come, fir, I know what I know.

DUKE. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are he may,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

LUCIO. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.

DUKE. He shall know you better, fir, if I may live to report you.

LUCIO. I fear you not.

DUKE. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite.<sup>6</sup> But indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll forswear this again.

LUCIO. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this: Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

DUKE. Why should he die, fir?

LUCIO. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again: this ungenitur'd agent<sup>7</sup> will unpeople the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were <sup>9</sup> He's now past it; yet,] Sir Thomas Hanmer reads—He is not past it yet. This emendation was received in the former edition, but seems not necessary. It were to be wished, that we all explained more, and amended less. JOHNSON.

If Johnson understood the passage as it stands, I wish he had explained it. To me, Hanmer's amendment appears absolutely necessary. M. MASON.

I have inserted Mr. M. Mason's remark: and yet the old reading is, in my opinion, too intelligible to need explanation.

STEEVENS.

PROV. A bawd of eleven years continuance, may it please your honour.

BAWD. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me: mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke's time, he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob: I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

ESCAL. That fellow is a fellow of much licence:—let him be called before us.—Away with her to prison: Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Bawd and Officers.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation: if my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

PROV. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

ESCAL. Good even, good father.

<sup>4</sup> ——— mercy swear, and play the tyrant.] We should read swerve, i. e. deviate from her nature. The common reading gives us the idea of a ranting whore. WARBURTON.

There is surely no need of emendation. We say at present, Such a thing is enough to make a parson swear, i. e. deviate from a proper respect to decency, and the sanctity of his character.

The idea of swearing agrees very well with that of a tyrant in our ancient mysteries. STEEVENS.

I do not much like mercy swear, the old reading; or mercy swerve, Dr. Warburton's correction. I believe it should be, this would make mercy severe. FARMER.

We still say, to swear like an emperor; and from some old book, of which I unfortunately neglected to copy the title, I have noted—to swear like a tyrant. To swear like a termagant is quoted elsewhere.

RITSON.

DUKE. Bliss and goodness on you!

DUKE. Not of this country, though my chance is

To use it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious order, late come from the see,<sup>4</sup>
In special business from his holiness.

ESCAL. What news abroad i' the world?

DUKE. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it:
novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. There is scarce truth enough alive, to make societies secure: but security enough, to make fellowships accurs'd:<sup>5</sup> much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every <sup>4</sup> — from the see,] The folio reads:

The emendation, which is undoubtedly right, was made by Mr.
Theobald. In Hall's Chronicle, sea is often written for see.

MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> There is scarce truth enough alive, to make societies secure; but security enough, to make fellowships accurs'd:] The speaker here alludes to those legal securities into which "fellowship" leads men to enter for each other. So, in King Henry IV. Part II: "He would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security."
Falstaff in the same scene, plays, like the Duke, on the same word:
"I had as lief they should put ratbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I look'd he should have sent me two and twenty yards of fatten, — and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security," &c. MALONE.

The sense is, "There scarcely exists sufficient honesty in the world to make social life secure; but there are occasions enough where a man may be drawn in to become surety, which will make him pay dearly for his friendships." In excuse of this quibble, Shakspeare may plead high authority. — "He that hateth suretyship day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

ESCAL. One, that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

DUKE. What pleasure was he given to?

ESCAL. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which 'profess'd to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

DUKE. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice: yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved <sup>6</sup> to die.

ESCAL. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman, to the extremest shore of my modesty; but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice.<sup>7</sup>

DUKE. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself.

ESCAL. I am going to visit the prisoner: Fare you well.

<sup>6</sup> — resolved — ] i. e. satisfied. So, in Middleton's More Dissemblers besides Women, Act I. sc. iii:

“ For I'm resolved they are good ones. ” REED.

STEEVENS.

DUKE. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt ESCALUS and Provost.]

He, who the sword of heaven will bear,
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go;<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Pattern in himself to know,

Grace to stand, and virtue go;] These lines I cannot understand, but believe that they should be read thus:

Patterning himself to know,

In grace to stand, in virtue go.

To pattern is to work after a pattern, and, perhaps, in Shakspeare's licentious diction, simply to work. The sense is, he that bears the sword of heaven should be holy as well as severe; one that after good examples labours to know himself, to live with innocence, and to act with virtue. JOHNSON.

This passage is very obscure, nor can be cleared without a more licentious paraphrase than any reader may be willing to allow. He that bears the sword of heaven should be not less holy than severe: should be able to discover in himself a pattern of such grace as can avoid temptation, together with such virtue as dares venture abroad into the world without danger of seduction. STEEVENS.

Grace to stand, and virtue go;] This last line is not intelligible as it stands; but a very slight alteration, the addition of the word in, at the beginning of it, which may refer to virtue as well as to grace, will render the sense of it clear. "Pattern in himself to know," is to feel in his own breast that virtue which he makes others practise. M. MASON.

"Pattern in himself to know," is, to experience in his own bosom an original principle of action, which, instead of being borrowed or copied from others, might serve as a pattern to them. Our author, in The Winter's Tale, has again used the same kind of imagery:

"By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out

"The purity of his."

In The Comedy of Errors he uses an expression equally hardy and licentious:

"And will have no attorney but myself;"

which is an absolute catachresis; an attorney importing precisely a person appointed to act for another. In Every Woman in her Humour, 1609, we find the same expression:

"— he hath but shown

"A pattern in himself, what thou shall find

"In others." MALONE.

More nor less to others paying,
 Than by self-offences weighing.
 Shame to him, whose cruel striking

 Twice treble shame on Angelo,

 O, what may man within him hide,
 Though angel on the outward side!<sup>2</sup>
 How may likeness, made in crimes,
 Making practice on the times,
 Draw with idle spiders' strings
 Most pond'rous and substantial things!<sup>3</sup>

<sup>9</sup> To weed my vice, and let his grow!] i. e. to weed faults out of my dukedom, and yet indulge himself in his own private vices.

So, in The Contention betwyxte Churchyard and Camell, &c. 1560:

"For Cato doth affyrme

"Ther is no greater shame,

"Than to reprove a vyce

"And your selves do the same." STEEVENS.

My, does not, I apprehend, relate to the Duke in particular, who had not been guilty of any vice, but to any indefinite person. The meaning seems to be — To destroy by extirpation (as it is expressed in another place) a fault that I have committed, and to suffer his own vices to grow to a rank and luxuriant height. The speaker, for the sake of argument, puts himself in the case of an offending person. MALONE.

The Duke is plainly speaking in his own person. What he here terms "my vice," may be explained from his conversation in Act I. sc. iv. with Friar Thomas, and especially the following line:

"—— 'twas my fault to give the people scope."

The vice of Angelo requires no explanation. HENLEY.

<sup>2</sup> Though angel on the outward side!] Here we see what induced our author to give the outward-fainted deputy, the name of Angelo.

MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> How may likeness, made in crimes,

Making practice on the times,

Draw with idle spiders' strings.

Most pond'rous and substantial things!] The old copy reads —

"To draw with," &c. STEEVENS.

Thus all the editions read corruptly; and so have made an obscure passage in itself, quite unintelligible. Shakspeare wrote it thus:

Craft against vice I must apply:
With Angelo to-night shall lie

*How may that likeness, made in crimes,
Making practice on the times,
Draw —*

The sense is this. How much wickedness may a man hide within, though he appear angel without. How may that likeness made in crimes i. e. by hypocrisy; [a pretty paradoxical expression, an angel made in crimes] by imposing upon the world [thus emphatically expressed, making practice on the times] draw with its false and feeble pretences [finely called spiders' strings] the most pondrous and substantial matters of the world, as riches, honour, power, reputation, &c. WARBURTON.

Likeness may mean seemliness, fair appearance, as we say, a likely man.

The Revisal reads thus:

*How may such likeness trade in crimes,
Making practice on the times,
To draw with idle spider's strings
Most pondrous and substantial things.*

Meaning by pondrous and substantial things, pleasure and wealth.

STEEVENS.

The old copy reads — Making practice, &c. which renders the passage ungrammatical, and unintelligible. For the emendation now made, [mocking] I am answerable. A line in Macbeth may add some support to it:

“Away, and mock the time with fairest show.”

There is no one more convinced of the general propriety of adhering to old readings. I have strenuously followed the course which was pointed out and successfully pursued by Dr. Farmer and Mr. Steevens, that of elucidating and supporting our author's genuine text by illustrations drawn from the writings of his contemporaries. But in some cases alteration is a matter not of choice, but necessity; and surely the present is one of them. Dr. Warburton, to obtain some sense, omitted the word To in the third line; in which he was followed by all the subsequent editors. But omission, in my apprehension, is of all the modes of emendation, the most exceptionable. In the passage before us, it is clear from the context, that some verb must have stood in either the first or second of these lines. Some years ago I conjectured that, instead of made, we ought to read wade, which was used in our author's time in the sense of to proceed. But having since had occasion to observe how often the words mock and make have been confounded in these plays, I am now persuaded that the single error in the present passage is, the word Making having been printed instead of Mocking, a word of which our author has made very frequent use, and which exactly suits the context. In this very play we have had make instead of mock. [See my note on p. 35.] In the handwriting of that time, the small c was merely a straight line; so that if it happened to be subjoined and written very close to an o, the two letters might easily be taken for an a. Hence I suppose it was, that these words have been so often confounded. The awkwardness of the expression — "Making practice," of which I have met with no example, may be likewise urged in support of this emendation.

Likeness is here used for specious or seeming virtue. So, before: "O seeming, seeming!" The sense then of the passage is, — How may persons assuming the likeness or semblance of virtue, while they are in fact guilty of the grossest crimes, impose with this counterfeit sanctity upon the world, in order to draw to themselves by the flimsiest pretensions the most solid advantages; i. e. pleasure, honour, reputation, &c.

In Much Ado about Nothing we have a similar thought:

"O, what authority and show of truth

"Can cunning sin cover itself withal!" MALONE.

I cannot admit that make, in the ancient copies of our author, has been so frequently printed instead of mock; for the passages in which the one is supposed to have been substituted for the other, are still unsettled. — But, be this as it may, I neither comprehend the drift of the lines before us as they stand in the old edition, or with the aid of any changes hitherto attempted; and must therefore bequeath them to the luckier efforts of future criticism. STEEVENS.

By made in crimes, the Duke means, trained in iniquity, and perfect in it. Thus we say—a made horse; a made pointer; meaning one well trained. M. MASON.

<sup>4</sup> So disguise shall, by the disguis'd,] So disguise shall by means of a person disguised, return an injurious demand with a counterfeit person. JOHNSON.

— I have possess'd him,] I have made him clearly and strongly comprehend. JOHNSON.

To possess had formerly the sense of inform or acquaint. As in Every Man in his Humour, Act I. sc. v. Captain Bobadil says: "Possess no gentleman of our acquaintance with notice of my lodging." REED.

<sup>5</sup> That stays upon me;] So, in Macbeth:

DUKE. Take then this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear:
I shall attend your leisure; but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

MARI. Will't please you walk aside?

[Exeunt MARIANA and ISABELLA.

DUKE. O place and greatness,<sup>6</sup> millions of false eyes<sup>7</sup>

Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> O place and greatness,] It plainly appears that this fine speech belongs to that which concludes the preceding scene between the Duke and Lucio. For they are absolutely foreign to the subject of this, and are the natural reflections arising from that. Besides, the very words,

Run with these false and most contrarious quests, evidently refer to Lucio's scandals just preceding; which the Oxford editor, in his usual way, has emended, by altering these to their. But that some time might be given to the two women to confer together, the players, I suppose, took part of the speech, beginning at No might nor greatness, &c. and put it here, without troubling themselves about its pertinency. However, we are obliged to them for not giving us their own impertinency, as they have frequently done in other places. WARBURTON.

I cannot agree that these lines are placed here by the players. The sentiments are common, and such as a prince, given to reflection, must have often present. There was a necessity to fill up the time in which the ladies converse apart, and they must have quick tongues and ready apprehensions, if they understood each other while this speech was uttered. JOHNSON.

So, in Chaucer's Sompnours Tale, Tyrwhitt's edit. v. 7633:

"Ther is ful many an eye, and many an ere,

"Awaiting on a lord," &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — contrarious quests —] Different reports, running counter to each other. JOHNSON.

So, in Othello:

"The senate has sent out three several quests."

Upon thy doings! thousand 'scapes of wit?<sup>7</sup>
 Make thee the father of their idle dream,
 And rack thee in their fancies! <sup>8</sup>—Welcome! How agreed?

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

ISAB. She'll take the enterprize upon her, father,
 If you advise it.

DUKE. It is not my consent,
 But my intreaty too.

ISAB. Little have you to say,
 When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
 Remember now my brother.

MARI. Fear me not.

DUKE. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all:
 He is your husband on a pre-contract:

In our author's K. Richard III. is a passage in some degree similar to the foregoing:

"My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
 "And every tongue brings in a several tale,
 "And every tale condemns" — STEEVENS.

I incline to think that quests here means inquisitions, in which sense the word was used in Shakspeare's time. See Minshieu's Dict. in v. Cole in his Latin Dictionary, 1679, renders "A quest," by "examen, inquisitio." MALONE.

False and contrarious quests in this place rather mean lying and contradictory messengers, with whom run volumes of report. An explanation, which the line quoted by Mr. Steevens will serve to confirm. RITSON.

<sup>7</sup> — 'scapes of wit —] i. e. fallies, irregularities. So, in King John, Act III. sc. iv:

"No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day." STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> And rack thee in their fancies!] Though rack, in the present instance, may signify torture or mangle, it might also mean confuse; as the rack, i. e. fleeting cloud, renders the object behind it obscure,
 and of undetermined form. So, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"That which was now a horse, even with a thought,
 "The rack dissimns, and makes it indistinct,
 "As water is in water." STEEVENS.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin;
 Sith that the justice of your title to him
 Doth flourish the deceit.<sup>9</sup> Come, let us go;
 Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's to sow.<sup>2</sup>

[Exeunt.]

<sup>9</sup> Doth flourish the deceit.] A metaphor taken from embroidery, where a coarse ground is filled up, and covered with figures of rich materials and elegant workmanship. WARBURTON.

Flourish is ornament in general. So, in our author's Twelfth Night:

" — empty trunks o'erflourish'd by the devil."

Dr. Warburton's illustration of the metaphor seems to be inaccurate. The passage from another of Shakspeare's plays, quoted by Mr. Steevens, suggests to us the true one.

The term — flourish, alludes to the flowers impressed on the waste printed paper and old books, with which trunks are commonly lined. HENLEY.

When it is proved that the practice alluded to, was as ancient as the time of Shakspeare, Mr. Henley's explanation may be admitted.

STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — for yet our tithe's to sow.] As before, the blundering editors have made a prince of the priestly Angelo, so here they have made a priest of the prince. We should read tilth, i. e. our tillage is yet to make. The grain from which we expect our harvest, is not yet put into the ground. WARBURTON.

The reader is here attacked with a petty sophism. We should read tilth, i. e. our tillage is to make. But in the text it is to sow; and who has ever said that his tillage was to sow? I believe tythe is right, and that the expression is proverbial, in which tythe is taken, by an easy metonymy, for harvest. JOHNSON.

Dr. Warburton did not do justice to his own conjecture; and no wonder, therefore, that Dr. Johnson has not. — Tilth is provincially used for land till'd, prepared for sowing. Shakspeare, however, has applied it before in its usual acceptation. FARMER.

Dr. Warburton's conjecture may be supported by many instances in Markham's English Husbandman, 1635: "After the beginning of March you shall begin to sowe your barley upon that ground which the year before did lye fallow, and is commonly called your tilth or fallow field." In p. 74 of this book, a corruption, like our author's, occurs. "As before, I said beginne to fallow your tithe field:" which is undoubtedly misprinted for tilth field.

A Room in the Prison.Enter Provost and Clown.

PROV. Come hither, firrah : Can you cut off a man's head?

CLO. If the man be a bachelor, fir, I can : but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

PROV. Come, fir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine : Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper : if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves ; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping ; <sup>2</sup> for you have been a notorius bawd.

CLO. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind ; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Tilth is used for crop, or harvest, by Gower, De Confessione Amantis, Lib. V. fol. 93. b :

“ To sowe cockill with the corne,
 “ So that the tilth is nigh forlorne,
 “ Which Christ sew first his owne honde.”

Shakspeare uses the word tilth in a former scene of this play ; and, (as Dr. Farmer has observed,) in its common acceptation :

“ — her plenteous womb
 “ Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry.”

Again, in The Tempest :

“ — bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none.”

but my quotation from Gower shows that, to sow tilth, was a phrase once in use. STEEVENS.

This conjecture appears to me extremely probable. MALONE.

“ ——— why so tart a favour,

“ To publish such good tidings.” STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> ——— what mystery, &c.] Though I have adopted an emendation independent of the following note, the omission of it would have been unwarrantable. STEEVENS.

————— what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clo. Proof.

ABHOR. Sir, it is a mystery.

CLO. Proof.

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief:

Clo. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.] Thus it stood in all the editions till Mr. Theobald's, and was, methinks, not very difficult to be understood. The plain and humorous sense of the speech is this. Every true man's apparel, which the thief robs him of, fits the thief. Why? Because, if it be too little for the thief, the true man thinks it big enough: i. e. a purchase too good for him. So that this fits the thief in the opinion of the true man. But if it be too big for the thief, yet the thief thinks it little enough: i. e. of value little enough. So that this fits the thief in his own opinion. Where we see, that the pleasantry of the joke consists in the equivocal sense of big enough, and little enough. Yet Mr. Theobald says, he can see no sense in all this, and therefore alters the whole thus: —

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Clown. If it be too little for your true man, your thief thinks it big enough: if it be too big for your true man, your thief thinks it little enough.

And for his alteration gives this extraordinary reason. — I am satisfied the poet intended a regular syllogism; and I submit it to judgment, whether my regulation has not restored that wit and humour which was quite lost in the depravation. — But the place is corrupt, though Mr. Theobald could not find it out. Let us consider it a little. The Hangman calls his trade a mystery: the Clown cannot conceive it. The Hangman undertakes to prove it in these words, Every true man's apparel, &c. but this proves the thief's trade a mystery, not the hangman's. Hence it appears, that the speech, in which the Hangman proved his trade a mystery, is lost. The very words it is impossible to retrieve, but one may easily understand what medium he employed in proving it: without doubt, the very same the Clown employed to prove the thief's trade a mystery; namely, that all sorts of clothes fitted the hangman. The Clown, on hearing this argument, replied, I suppose, to this effect: Why, by the same kind of reasoning, I can prove the thief's trade too to be a mystery. The other asks how, and the Clown goes on as above, Every true man's apparel fits your thief; if it be too little, &c. The jocular conclusion from the whole, being an insinuation that thief and hangman were rogues alike. This conjecture gives a spirit and integrity to the dialogue, which, in its present mangled condition, is altogether wanting; and shews why the argument of every true man's apparel, &c. was in all editions given to the Clown, to whom indeed it belongs; and likewise that the present reading of that argument is the true. WARBURTON.

If Dr. Warburton had attended to the argument by which the Bawd proves his own profession to be a mystery, he would not have been driven to take refuge in the groundless supposition, "that part of the dialogue had been lost or dropped."

The argument of the Hangman is exactly similar to that of the Bawd. As the latter puts in his claim to the whores, as members of his occupation, and, in virtue of their painting, would enroll his own fraternity in the mystery of painters; so the former equally lays claim to the thieves, as members of his occupation, and, in their right, endeavours to rank his brethren, the hangmen, under the mystery of fitters of apparel, or tailors. The reading of the old editions is therefore undoubtedly right; except that the last speech, which makes part of the Hangman's argument, is, by mistake, as the reader's own sagacity will readily perceive, given to the Clown or Bawd. I suppose, therefore the poet gave us the whole thus:

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clown. Proof.

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough: if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

I must do Dr. Warburton the justice to acknowledge, that he hath rightly apprehended, and explained the force of the Hangman's argument. HEATH.

There can be no doubt but the word Clown, prefixed to the last sentence, If it be too little, &c. should be struck out. It makes part of Abhorson's argument, who has undertaken to prove that hanging was a mystery, and convinces the Clown of it by this very speech. M. MASON.

<sup>5</sup> Every true man's apparel fits your thief:] So, in Promos and Cassandra, 1578, the Hangman says:

"Here is nyne and twenty futes of apparell for my share." True man, in the language of ancient times, is always placed in opposition to thief.

So, in Churchyard's Warning to Wanderers abroad, 1593:

"The priuy thiefe that steales away our wealth,

"Is fore afraid a true man's steps to see. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens seems to be mistaken in his assertion that true man in ancient times was always placed in opposition to thief. At least in the book of Genesis, there is one instance to the contrary, ch. xlii. v. 11: — "We are all one man's sons: we are all true men; thy servants are no spies." HENLEY.

If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

PROV. Are you agreed?

CLO. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftner ask forgiveness.<sup>6</sup>

PROV. You, firrah, provide your block and your axe, to-morrow four o'clock.

ABHOR. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

CLO. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare:<sup>7</sup> for, truly sir, for your kindness, I owe you a good turn.<sup>8</sup>

PROV. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:

[Exeunt Clown and ABHORSON.

One has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter CLAUDIO.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death:

<sup>6</sup> ———ask forgiveness] So, in As you like it:

“ ——— The common executioner,

“ Whose heart the accustom'd fight of death makes hard,

“ Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,

“ But first begs pardon.” STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> ———yare:] i. e. handy, nimble in the execution of my office. So, in Twelfth Night: “ ———dismount thy tuck, be yare in thy preparation.” Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

“ His ships are yare, yours heavy.” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> ——— a good turn.] i. e. a turn off the ladder. He quibbles on the phrase according to its common acceptation. FARMER.

'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

CLAUD. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour

When it lies starkly<sup>9</sup> in the traveller's bones:
He will not wake.

PROV. Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. But hark, what noise?

[Knocking within.]

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit CLAUDIO.] by and by:—

I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve,
For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

Enter DUKE.

DUKE. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night

Envelop you, good Provost! Who call'd here of late?

PROV. None, since the curfew rung.

DUKE. Not Isabel?

PROV. No.

DUKE. They will then,<sup>2</sup> ere't be long.

PROV. What comfort is for Claudio?

DUKE. There's some in hope.

PROV. It is a bitter deputy.

So, in The Legend of Lord Hastings, 1575:

“Least starke with rest they finew'd waxe and hoare.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> They will then,] Perhaps—she will then. SIR J. HAWKINS.
The Duke expects Isabella and Mariana. A little afterward he says:

“—Now are they come.” RITSON.

DUKE. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
 Even with the stroke<sup>3</sup> and line of his great justice;
 He doth with holy abstinence subdue
 That in himself, which he spurs on his power
 To qualify<sup>4</sup> in others: were he meal'd<sup>5</sup>
 With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;

But this being so,<sup>6</sup> he's just. — Now are they come — [Knocking within. — Provost goes out.
 This is a gentle provost: Seldom, when
 The steeled gaoler is the friend of men. —
 How now? What noise? That spirit's possess'd with haste,

That wounds the unfisting postern with these strokes.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>4</sup> To qualify —] To temper, to moderate, as we say wine is qualified with water. JOHNSON.

Thus before in this play:

“ So to enforce, or qualify the laws.”

Again, in Othello:

“ I have drank but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — were he meal'd —] Were he sprinkled; were he defiled. A figure of the same kind our author uses in Macbeth:

“ The blood-bolter'd Banquo.” JOHNSON.

More appositely, in the Philosophers Satires, by Robert Anton:

“ As if their perriwigs to death they gave,

“ To meale them in some gasty dead man's grave.”

STEEVENS.

Mealed is mingled, compounded; from the French maître.

BLACKSTONE.

<sup>6</sup> But this being so,] The tenor of the argument seems to require — But this not being so, —. Perhaps, however, the author meant only to say — But, his life being paralleled, &c. he's just.

MALONE.

That wounds the unfisting postern with these strokes.] The line is irregular, and the old reading, unresisting postern, so strange an expression, that want of measure, and want of sense, might justly raise Provost returns, speaking to one at the door.

PROV. There he must stay, until the officer
Arise to let him in; he is call'd up.

DUKE. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?

PROV. None, sir, none.

DUKE. As near the dawning, Provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

PROV. Happily,
You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No countermand; no such example have we:
Besides, upon the very siege of justice,<sup>s</sup>
Lord Angelo hath to the publick ear
Profess'd the contrary.

suspicion of an error; yet none of the latter editors seem to have supposed the place faulty, except Sir Thomas Hanmer, who reads:

——— the unresisting postern —

The three folios have it,

——— unfisting postern — out of which Mr. Rowe made unresisting, and the rest followed him. Sir Thomas Hanmer seems to have supposed unresisting the word in the copies, from which he plausibly enough extracted unresling; but he grounded his emendation on the very syllable that wants authority. What can be made of unfisting I know not; the best that occurs to me is unfeeling. JOHNSON.

Unfisting may signify “never at rest,” always opening.

BLACKSTONE.

I should think we might safely read:

——— unlift'ning postern, or unshifting postern.

The measure requires it, and the sense remains uninjured.

Mr. M. Mason would read unlifting, which means unregarding.
I have, however, inserted Sir William Blackstone's emendation in the text. STEEVENS.

So, in Othello:

“—— I fetch my birth

“From men of royal siege.” STEEVENS.

Enter a Messenger.

DUKE. This is his lordship's man.<sup>8</sup>

PROV. And here comes Claudio's pardon.<sup>9</sup>

MESS. My lord hath sent you this note ; and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow ; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

PROV. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.

DUKE. This is his pardon ; purchas'd by such sin, [Aside.

For which the pardoner himself is in :
Hence hath offence his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority :

<sup>8</sup> — This is his lordships man. ] The old copy has—his lord's man. Corrected by Mr. Pope. In the MS. plays of our author's time they often wrote Lo. for Lord, and Lord, for Lordship ; and these contractions were sometimes improperly followed in the printed copies.
MALONE.

Duke. This is his lordship's man.

Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon. ] The Provost has just declared a fixed opinion that the execution will not be countermanded, and yet, upon the first appearance of the Messenger, he immediately guesses that his errand is to bring Claudio's pardon. It is evident, I think, that the names of the speakers are misplaced. If we suppose the Provost to say :

This is his lordship's man,
it is very natural for the Duke to subjoin,
And here comes Claudio's pardon.

The Duke might believe, upon very reasonable grounds, that Angelo had now sent the pardon. It appears that he did so, from what he says to himself, while the Provost is reading the letter :

This is his pardon ; purchas'd by such sin. TYRWHITT.

When immediately after the Duke had hinted his expectation of a pardon, the Provost sees the Messenger, he supposes the Duke to have known something, and changes his mind. Either reading may serve equally well. JOHNSON.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love, is the offender friended.—
Now, fir, what news?

PROV. I told you: Lord Angelo, be-like, thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on:<sup>2</sup> methinks, strangely; for he hath not used it before.

DUKE. Pray you, let's hear.

PROV. [Reads.] Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and, in the afternoon, Barnardine: for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly perform'd; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.

What say you to this, fir?

DUKE. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

PROV. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.<sup>3</sup>

DUKE. How came it, that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

PROV. His friends still wrought reprieves for him: And, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

DUKE. Is it now apparent?

PROV. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

<sup>2</sup> ——— putting on:] i. e. spur, incitement. —So, in Macbeth, Act IV. sc. iii:

“ ——— the powers above

“ Put on their instruments.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— one that is a prisoner nine years old.] i. e. That has been confined these nine years. So, in Hamlet: “Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike preparation,” &c. MALONE.

DUKE. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? How seems he to be touch'd?

PROV. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.<sup>2</sup>

DUKE. He wants advice.

PROV. He will hear none: he hath ever more had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very often awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and show'd him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

DUKE. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, Provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but in the boldness of my cunning,<sup>3</sup> I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have a warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him: To make you under-<sup>2</sup> ——— desperately mortal.] This expression is obscure. Sir Thomas Hanmer reads, mortally desperate. Mortally is in low conversation used in this sense, but I know not whether it was ever written. I am inclined to believe, that desperately mortal means desperately mischievous. Or desperately mortal may mean a man likely to die in a desperate state, without reflection or repentance. JOHNSON.

The word is often used by Shakspeare in the sense first affixed to it by Dr. Johnson, which I believe to be the true one. So, in Othello:

"And you, ye mortal engines," &c. MALONE.

As our author, in The Tempest, seems to have written "harmonious charmingly," instead of "harmoniously charming," he may, in the present instance, have given us "desperately mortal," for "mortally desperate:" i. e. desperate in the extreme. — In low provincial language, — mortal sick, — mortal bad, — mortal poor, is phraseology of frequent occurrence. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— in the boldness of my cunning,] i. e. in confidence of my sagacity. STEEVENS.

stand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

PROV. Pray, sir, in what?

DUKE. In the delaying death.

PROV. Alack! how may I do it? having the hour limited; and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

DUKE. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

PROV. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.<sup>4</sup>

DUKE. O, death's a great disguiser: and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard;<sup>5</sup> and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared<sup>6</sup>

<sup>5</sup> ——— and tie the beard;] The Revisal recommends Mr. Simpson's emendation, DIE the beard, but the present reading may stand. Perhaps it was usual to tie up the beard before decollation. Sir T. More is said to have been ludicrously careful about this ornament of his face. It should, however, be remembered, that it was also the custom to die beards.

So, in the old comedy of Ram-Alley, 1611:

“What colour'd beard comes next by the window?”

“A black man's, I think.

“I think, a red; for that is most in fashion.”

Again, in The Silent Woman: “I have fitted my divine and canonist, dyed their beards and all.”

Again, in The Alchemist: “———— he had dy'd his beard, and all.”

STEEVENS.

A beard tied would give a very new air to that face, which had never been seen but with the beard loose, long, and squalid. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> ——— to be so bared—] These words relate to what has just preceded — shave the head. The modern editions following the fourth folio, read — to be so barb'd; but the old copy is certainly right. So, in All's well that ends well: “I would the cutting of

If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

PROV. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

DUKE. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

PROV. To him, and to his substitutes.

DUKE. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

PROV. But what likelihood is in that?

DUKE. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful, that neither my coat, integrity, nor my persuasion, can with ease attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke. You know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

PROV. I know them both.

DUKE. The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure;
where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing, that Angelo knows not:
for he this very day receives letters of strange te-my garments would serve the turn, or the baring of my beard; and to say it was in stratagem." MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> — you know, the course is common.] P. Mathieu, in his Heroyke Life and deplorable Death of Henry the Fourth, of France, says, that Ravallac, in the midst of his tortures, lifted up his head and shook a spark of fire from his beard. "This unprofitable care, (he adds,) to save it, being noted, afforded matter to divers to praise the custome in Germany, Swisserland, and divers other places, bodies of those who are convicted for any notorious crimes."

Come away; it is almost clear dawn. [Exeunt.]

Enter Clown.

CLO. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession:<sup>9</sup> one would think, it were mistress Over-done's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young master Rash;<sup>2</sup> he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger,<sup>3</sup> ninescore and seventeen pounds;

<sup>9</sup> ——— in our house of profession: ] i. e. in my late mistress's house, which was a professed, a notorious bawdy-house. MALONE.

of which he made five marks, ready money: marry,

It is not unlikely that the originals of the pictures were then known. JOHNSON.

Rash was the name of some kind of stuff. So, in An Aprill Shower, shed in abundance of teares, for the death and incomparable losse, &c. of Richard Sacvile, &c. Earl of Dorset, &c. 1624:

“ For with the plainest plaine yee saw him goe,
“ In ciuill blacke of Rash, of Serge, or so;
“ The liuerie of wise stayedneffe ”——. STEEVENS.

If this term alludes to the stuff so called, (which was probably one of the commodities fraudulently issued out by money-lenders) there is nevertheless a pun intended. So, in an old MS. poem, entitled, The Description of Women:

“ Their head is made of Rash,
“ Their tongues are made of Say.” DOUCE.

All the names here mentioned are characteristical. Rash was a stuff formerly used. So, in A Reply as true as Steele, to a rusty, rayling, ridiculous, lying Libell, which was lately written by an impudent unfoder'd Ironmonger, and called by the name of an Answer to a foolish pamphlet entitled A Swarme of Sectaries and Schismatiques. By John Taylour, 1641:

“ And with mockado suit, and judgement rash,
“ And tongue of saye, thou'lt say all is but trash.”

Sericum rasum. See Minshew's Dict. in v. Rash, and Florio's Italian Dict. 1598, in v. rascia, raschetta. MALONE.

3 ——— a commodity of brown paper and old ginger,] Thus the old copy. The modern editors read, brown pepper; but the following passage in Michaelmas Term, Com. 1607, will completely establish the original reading:

“ I know some gentlemen in town have been glad, and are glad at this time, to take up commodities in hawk's-hoods and brown-paper.” Again, in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636:

“ ———to have been so bit already
“ With taking up commodities of brown paper;
“ Buttons past fashion, filks, and fattins,
“ Babies and children's fiddles, with like trash
“ Took up at a dear rate, and sold for trifles.”

Again, in Greene's Quip for an Upstart Courtier, 1620:

“ For the merchant, he delivered the iron, tin, lead, hops, sugars, spices, oyls, brown paper, or whatever else, from six months to six months. Which when the poor gentleman came to sell again, he could not make three score and ten in the hundred besides the usury.” Again, in Greene's Defence of Coney-catching, 1592:

then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. <sup>4</sup> Then is there here one master Caper, at the suit of master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-colour'd fatin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here

" ——— so that if he borrow an hundred pound, he shall have forty in silver, and threescore in wares; as lutestrings, hobby-horses, or brown paper, or cloath," &c.

Again, in The Spanish Curate of Beaumont and Fletcher:

" Commodities of pins, brown papers, packthread."

Again, in Gascoigne's Steele Glaspe:

" To teach young men the trade to sell browne paper."

Again, in Hall's Satires, Lib. IV:

" But Nummius eas'd the needy gallant's care,

" With a base bargaine of his blowen ware,

" Of fustid hoppes now lost for lacke of sayle,

" Or mol'd browne-paper that could nought auaille."

Again, in Decker's Seven deadly Sinnes of London, 4to. bl. l. 1606:

" ——— and these are usurers who, for a little money, and a great deale of trash, (as fire-shouels, browne-paper, motley cloacke-bags, &c.) bring yong nouices into a foole's paradise, till they have sealed the mortgage of their landes," &c. STEEVENS.

A commodity of brown paper — ] Mr. Steevens supports this rightly. Fennor asks, in his Comptor's Commonwealth, " suppose the commodities are delivered after Signior Unthrif and master Broaker have both sealed the bonds, how must those hobby-horses, reams of brown paper, Jewes trumpes and bables, babies and rattles, be solde?" FARMER.

In a MS. letter from Sir John Hollis to Lord Burleigh, is the following passage; " Your Lordship digged into my auncestors graves, and pulling one up from his 70 yeares rest, pronounced him an abominable usurer and merchante of browne paper, so hatefull and contemptible that the players aded him before the kinge with great applause." And again: " Nevertheles I denye that any of them were merchantes of browne paper, neither doe I thinke any other but your Lordship's imagination ever sawe or hearde any of them playde upon a stage; and that they were such usurers I suppose your Lordship will want testimonye."

DOUCE.

<sup>4</sup> ——— ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. ] So, in The Merchant of Venice: — " I would, she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapt ginger." STEEVENS.

young Dizzy,<sup>3</sup> and young master Deep-vow, and master Copper-spur, and master Starve-lucky the rapier and dagger-man, and young Drop-heir that kill'd lusty Pudding, and master Forthright<sup>4</sup> the tilter, and brave master Shoe-tye the great traveller,<sup>5</sup> and

3 ——— young Dizzy,] The old copy has—Dizey. This name, like the rest, must have been designed to convey some meaning. It might have been corrupted from Dizzy, i. e. giddy, thoughtless. Thus Milton styles the people “—the dizzy multitude.”

STEEVENS.

4 ——— master Forthright—] The old copy reads—Forthlight. Dr. Johnson, however, proposes to read Forthright, alluding to the line in which the thrust is made. Mr. Ritson defends the present reading, by supposing the allusion to be to the fencers threat of making the light shine through his antagonist. REED.

Had he produced any proof that such an expression was in use in our author's time, his observation might have had some weight. It is probably a phrase of the present century. MALONE.

Shakspeare uses the word forthright in The Tempest:

“Through forthrights and meanders.”

Again, in Troilus and Cressida, A&C. III. sc. iii:

“Or hedge aside from the direct forthright.” STEEVENS.

5 ——— and brave master Shoe-tye the great traveller,] The old copy reads—Shooty; but as most of these are compound names, I suspect that this was originally written as I have printed it. At this time Shoe-strings were generally worn. So, in Decker's Match me in London, 1631:

“I think your wedding shoes have not been oft untied.”

Again, in Randolph's Muses' Looking Glasse, 1638:

“Bending his supple hams, kissing his hands,

“Honouring shoe-strings.”

Again, in Marston's 8th Satire:

“Sweet-faced Corinna, daine the riband tie

“Of thy corke-shoe, or els thy slave will die.”

As the person described was a traveller, it is not unlikely that he might be solicitous about the minutiae of dress; and the epithet brave, i. e. showy, seems to countenance the supposition. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens's supposition is strengthened by Ben Jonson's Epigram upon English Monsieur, Whalley's edit. Vol. VI. p. 253:

“That so much scarf of France, and hat and feather,

“And shoe, and tye, and garter, should come hither.”

TOLLET.

wild Half-can that flabb'd Pots, and, I think forty more; all great doers in our trade,<sup>6</sup> and are now for the Lord's sake.<sup>7</sup>

The finery which induced our author to give his traveller the name of Shoe-tye, was used on the stage in his time. "Would not this fir, (says Hamlet) and a forest of feathers, — with two Provençial roses on my raz'd shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, fir?" MALONE.

The roses mentioned in the foregoing instance, were not the ligatures of the shoe, but the ornaments above them. STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — all great doers in our trade. ] The word doers is here used in a wanton sense. See Mr. Collins's note; Act I. sc. ii.

MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> — for the Lord's sake. ] i. e. to beg for the rest of their lives.

WARBURTON.

I rather think this expression intended to ridicule the Puritans, whose turbulence and indecency often brought them to prison, and who considered themselves as suffering for religion.

It is not unlikely that men imprisoned for other crimes, might represent themselves to casual enquirers, as suffering for puritanism, and that this might be the common cant of the prisons. In Donne's time, every prisoner was brought to jail by suretiship.

JOHNSON.

The word in (now expunged in consequence of a following and apposite quotation of Mr. Malone's) had been supplied by some of the modern editors. The phrase which Dr. Johnson has justly explained, is used in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636: " — I held it, wife, a deed of charity, and did it for the Lord's sake."

STEEVENS.

I believe Dr. Warburton's explanation is right. It appears from a poem entitled, Paper's Complaint, printed among Davies's epigrams, [about the year 1611.] that this was the language in which prisoners who were confined for debt, addressed passengers:

" Good gentle writers, for the Lord's sake, for the Lord's sake,

" Like Lugdate prisoner, lo, I, begging make

" My mone."

The meaning, however, may be, to beg or borrow for the rest of their lives. A passage in Much Ado about Nothing may countenance this interpretation: " he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging to it, and borrows money in God's name, the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake."

Enter ABHORSON.

ABHOR. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

CLO. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, master Barnardine!

ABHOR. What, ho, Barnardine!

BARNAR. [Within.] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

CLO. Your friends, sir; the hangman: You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

BARNAR. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away; I am sleepy.

ABHOR. Tell him, he must awake, and that quickly too.

CLO. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

ABHOR. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

CLO. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter BARNARDINE.

ABHOR. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

CLO. Very ready, sir.

BARNAR. How now, Abhorson? what's the news with you?

ABHOR. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; <sup>7</sup> for, look you, the warrant's come.

Mr. Pope reads—and are now in for the Lord's sake. Perhaps unnecessarily. In K. Henry IV. P. I. Falstaff says,—“there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, —to beg during life.” MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> ——— to clap into your prayers;] This cant phrase occurs also in As you Like it: “Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting?” STEEVENS.

BARNAR. You rogue, I have been drinking all night, I am not fitted for't.

CLO. O, the better, fir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the founder all the next day.

Enter DUKE.

ABHOR. Look you, fir, here comes your ghostly father; Do we jest now, think you?

DUKE. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

BARNAR. Friar, not I; I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

DUKE. O, fir, you must: and therefore, I beseech you,

Look forward on the journey you shall go.

BARNAR. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

DUKE. But heard you, ——

BARNAR. Not a word; if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day. [ Exit.

Enter Provost.

DUKE. Unfit to live, or die: O, gravel heart!—
After him, fellows; <sup>s</sup> bring him to the block.

[ Exeunt ABHORSON and Clown.

<sup>s</sup> After him, fellows;] Here is a line given to the Duke, which belongs to the Provost. The Provost, while the Duke is lamenting

PROV. Now, fir, how do you find the prifoner?

DUKE. A creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And, to transport him<sup>9</sup> in the mind he is,
Were damnable.

PROV. Here in the prifon, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragozine, a moft notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years; his beard, and head,
Juft of his colour: What if we do omit
This reprobate, till he were well inclin'd;
And fatisfy the deputy with the viſage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

DUKE. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides!
Diſpatch it prefently; the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo: See, this be done,
And ſent according to command; whiles I
Perſuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

PROV. This ſhall be done, good father, prefently.
But Barnardine muſt die this afternoon:
And how ſhall we continue Claudio,
To ſave me from the danger that might come,
If he were known alive?

DUKE. Let this be done;—Put them in ſecret holds,
Both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice
The ſun hath made his journal greeting to the obduracy of the prifoner, cries out:

After him, fellows, &c.

and when they are gone out, turns again to the Duke. JOHNSON.

I do not ſee why this line ſhould be taken from the Duke, and ſtill leſs why it ſhould be given to the Provost, who, by his queſtion to the Duke in the next line, appears to be ignorant of every thing that has paſſed between him and Barnardine. TYRWHITT.

<sup>9</sup> ——— to transport him—] To remove him from one world to another. The French trépas affords a kindred ſenſe. JOHNSON.

The under generation,<sup>2</sup> you shall find
Your safety manifested.

PROV. I am your free dependant.

DUKE. Quick, dispatch,
And send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.
Now will I write letters to Angelo, —
The provost, he shall bear them, — whose contents shall witness to him, I am near at home;
And that, by great injunctions, I am bound
To enter publickly: him I'll desire
To meet me at the consecrated fount,
A league below the city; and from thence,

<sup>2</sup> The under generation,] So Sir Thomas Hanmer, with true judgement. It was in all the former editions:

To yonder ———
ye under and yonder were confounded. JOHNSON.

The old reading is not yonder but yond. STEEVENS.

To yond generation,] Prisons are generally so constructed as not to admit the rays of the sun. Hence the Duke here speaks of its greeting only those without the doors of the jail, to which he must be supposed to point when he speaks these words. Sir T. Hanmer, I think without necessity, reads—To the under generation, which has been followed by the subsequent editors.

Journal, in the preceding line, is daily. Journalier, Fr. MALONE.

Mr. Malone reads:

To yond generation, you shall find ———

But surely it is impossible that yond should be the true reading; for unless ge-ne-ra-ti-on were sounded as a word of five syllables, (a practice from which every ear must revolt,) the metre would be defective. It reminds one too much of Peascod, in Gay's What d'ye call it:

“The Pilgrim's Progress—eighth—e-di-ti-on,

By the under generation our poet means the antipodes. So, in King Richard II:

“—— when the searching eye of heaven is hid

“Behind the globe, and lights the lower world.”

STEEVENS.

By cold gradation and weal-balanced form,<sup>3</sup>
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

PROV. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

DUKE. Convenient is it: Make a swift return;
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no ear but yours.

PROV. I'll make all speed.

[Exit.]

ISAB. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here!

DUKE. The tongue of Isabel:—She's come to know,
If yet her brother's pardon be come hither:
But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected.<sup>4</sup>

Enter ISABELLA.

ISAB. Ho, by your leave.

DUKE. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

ISAB. The better, given me by so holy a man.
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

DUKE. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world;
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.

<sup>3</sup> ——— weal-balanced form,] Thus the old copy. Mr. Heath thinks that well-balanced is the true reading; and Hanmer was of the same opinion. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> When it is least expected.] A better reason might have been given. It was necessary to keep Isabella in ignorance, that she might with more keenness accuse the deputy. JOHNSON.

ISAB. Nay, but it is not so.

DUKE.

It is no other:

Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

ISAB. O, I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

DUKE. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

ISAB. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!

Injurious world! Most damned Angelo!

DUKE. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot:

Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.

Mark what I say; which you shall find

By every syllable, a faithful verity:

The duke comes home to-morrow; —nay, dry your eyes;

One of our convent, and his confessor,

Gives me this instance: Already he hath carried

Notice to Escalus and Angelo;

Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,

There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom

In that good path that I would wish it go;

And you shall have your bosom<sup>5</sup> on this wretch,

Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,

And general honour.

ISAB.

I am directed by you.

DUKE. This letter then to friar Peter give;

'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:

Say, by this token, I desire his company

At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours,

I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you

Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo

Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self,

I am combined by a sacred vow,<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> I am combined by a sacred vow, ] I once thought this should be confined, but Shakspeare uses combine for to bind by a pact or agreement; so he calls Angelo the combinate husband of Mariana. JOHNSON.

And shall be absent. Wend you' with this letter:
 Command these fretting waters from your eyes
 With a light heart; trust not my holy order,
 If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter LUCIO.

LUCIO. Good even!
 Friar, where is the provost?

DUKE. Not within, sir.

LUCIO. O, pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient: I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't: But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners<sup>7</sup> had been at home, he had lived.

[Exit ISABELLA.

DUKE. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholden to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Wend you —] To wend is to go.—An obsolete word. So, in The Comedy of Errors:

“Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend.”

Again, in Orlando Furioso, 1599:

“To let his daughter wend with us to France.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — if the old, &c.] Sir Thomas Hanmer reads—the odd fantastical duke; but old is a common word of aggravation in ludicrous language, as, there was old revelling. JOHNSON.

— duke of dark corners —] This duke who meets his mistresses in by-places. So, in King Henry VIII:

“There is nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

“Deserves a corner.” MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> — he lives not in them,] i. e. his character depends not on them. So, in Much ado about Nothing:

“The practice of it lives in John the bastard.” STEEVENS.

LUCIO. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman<sup>2</sup> than thou takest him for.

DUKE. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

LUCIO. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

DUKE. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

LUCIO. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

DUKE. Did you such a thing?

LUCIO. Yes, marry, did I: but was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

DUKE. Sir, your company is fairer than honest: Rest you well.

LUCIO. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it: Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr, I shall stick.

[Exeunt.]

<sup>2</sup> ———woodman——] A woodman seems to have been an attendant or servant to the Officer called Forester. See Manwood on the Forest Laws, 4to. 1615, p. 46. It is here, however, used in a wanton sense, and was, probably, in our author's time generally so received. In like manner in The Chances, A& I. sc. ix. the Landlady says:

"—— Well, well, son John,

" I see you are a woodman, and can choose

" Your deer tho' it be i' th' dark." REED.

So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, Falstaff asks his mistress:

"—— Am I a woodman? Ha!" STEEVENS.

S C E N E IV.

A Room in ANGELO's House.Enter ANGELO and ESCALUS.

ESCAL. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

ANG. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions shew much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver our authorities there?

ESCAL. I guess not.

ANG. And why should we <sup>2</sup> proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that, if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

ESCAL. He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints; and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

ANG. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaim'd: Betimes i' the morn, I'll call you at your house, <sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Ang. And why should we, &c.] It is the conscious guilt of Angelo that prompts this question. The reply of Escalus is such as arises from an undisturbed mind, that only considers the mysterious conduct of the Duke in a political point of view.

STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— let it be proclaim'd:

'Betimes i' the morn, &c.'] Perhaps it should be pointed thus:

———— let it be proclaim'd

Betimes i' the morn: I'll call you at your house.

So above:

“ And why should we proclaim it an hour before his entering?”

MALONE.

Give notice to such men of sort and suit,<sup>4</sup>
As are to meet him.

ESCAL.

I shall, sir: fare you well.

[Exit.

ANG. Good night.—

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant,<sup>5</sup>
And dull to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid!
And by an eminent body, that enforc'd
The law against it! — But that her tender shame
Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,
How might she tongue me? Yet reason dares her?
—no:<sup>6</sup>

Not so, as I imagine, in this passage. In the feudal times all vassals were bound to hold suit and service to their over-lord; that is, to be ready at all times to attend and serve him, either when summoned to his courts, or to his standard in war. Such men of sort and suit as are to meet him, I presume, means the Duke's vassals or tenants in capite. — Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786.

STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — makes me unpregnant,] In the first scene the Duke says that Escalus is pregnant, i. e. ready in the forms of law. Unpregnant therefore, in the instance before us, is unready, unprepared.

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — Yet reason dares her? — no:] The old folio impressions read:

Yet reason dares her No.

And this is right. The meaning is, the circumstances of our case are such, that she will never venture to contradict me; dares her to reply No to me, whatever I say. WARBURTON.

Mr. Theobald reads:

— Yet reason dares her note.

Sir Thomas Hanmer:

— Yet reason dares her: No.

Mr. Upton:

— Yet reason dares her — No.

which he explains thus: Were it not for her maiden modesty, how might the lady proclaim my guilt? Yet (you'll say) she has reason on her side, and that will make her dare to do it. I think not; for my authority is of such weight, &c. I am afraid dare has no such signification. I have nothing to offer worth insertion. JOHNSON.

For my authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,

To dare has two significations ; to terrify, as in The Maid's Tragedy :

“ ——— those mad mischiefs

“ Would dare a woman.”

In King Henry IV. Part I. it means, to challenge, or call forth :

“ Unless a brother should a brother dare

“ To gentle exercise,” &c.

I would therefore read :

—— Yet reason dares her not

For my authority, &c.

Or perhaps, with only a slight transposition :

—— yet no reason dares her, &c.

The meaning will then be,—Yet reason does not challenge, call forth, or incite her to appear against me, for my authority is above the reach of her accusation. STEEVENS.

—— Yet reason dares her No. ] Dr. Warburton is evidently right with respect to this reading, though wrong in his application. The expression is a provincial one, and very intelligible :

—— But that her tender shame

Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,

How might she tongue me? Yet reason dares her No.

That is, reason dares her to do it, as by this means she would not only publish her “ maiden loss,” but also as she would certainly suffer from the imposing credit of his station and power, which would repel with disgrace any attack on his reputation :

For my authority bears a credent bulk,

That no particular scandal once can touch,

But it confounds the breather. — HENLEY.

We think Mr. Henley rightly understands this passage, but has not sufficiently explained himself. Reason, or reflection, we conceive, personified by Shakspeare, and represented as daring or over-awing Isabella, and crying No to her, whenever she finds herself prompted to “ tongue ” Angelo. Dare is often met with in this sense in Shakspeare. Beaumont and Fletcher have used the word No in a similar way in The Chances, A& III. sc. iv :

“ I wear a sword to satisfy the world no.”

Again, in A Wife for a Month, A& IV :

“ I'm sure he did not, for I charg'd him no.”

MONTHLY REVIEW.

—— Yet reason dares her? no: ] Yet does not reason challenge or incite her to accuse me? — no, (answers the speaker) for my authority, &c. To dare, in this sense, is yet a school-phrase :

But it confounds the breather.<sup>7</sup> He should have
liv'd,

Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might, in the times to come, have ta'en revenge,
By so receiving a dishonour'd life,
With ransom of such shame. 'Would yet he had
liv'd!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.<sup>8</sup>

[Exit.]

Shakspeare probably learnt it there. He has again used the word in King Henry VI. Part II:

"What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him."

MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> — my authority bears a credent bulk,

That no particular scandal, &c.] Credent is creditable, enforcing credit, not questionable. The old English writers often confound the active and passive adjectives. So Shakspeare, and Milton after him, use inexpressive for intexpressible.

Particular is private, a French sense. No scandal from any private mouth can reach a man in my authority. JOHNSON.

The old copy reads—"bears of a credent bulk. If of be any thing more than a blunder, it must mean—bears off, i. e. carries with it. As this monosyllable, however, does not improve our author's sense, and clogs his metre, I have omitted it. STEEVENS.

Perhaps Angelo means, that his authority will ward off or set aside the weightiest and most probable charge that can be brought against him. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> — we would, and we would not. ] Here undoubtedly the act should end, and was ended by the poet; for here is properly a cessation of action, and a night intervenes, and the place is changed, between the passages of this scene, and those of the next. The next act beginning with the following scene, proceeds without any interruption of time or change of place. JOHNSON.

S C E N E V.

*Fields without the Town.Enter DUKE in his own habit, and Friar PETER.*DUKE. These letters<sup>9</sup> at fit time deliver me.[Giving letters.]

The provost knows our purpose, and our plot.

The matter being afoot, keep your instruction,

And hold you ever to our special drift;

Though sometimes you do blench from this to that,<sup>21</sup>

As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house,

And tell him where I stay: give the like notice,

To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Crassus,

And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;

But send me Flavius first.

F. PETER.

It shall be speeded well.

[Exit Friar.]*Enter VARRIUS.*DUKE. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste:

<sup>9</sup> These letters—] Peter never delivers the letters, but tells his story without any credentials. The poet forgot the plot which he had formed. JOHNSON.

The first clause of this remark is undoubtedly just; but, respecting the second, I wish our readers to recollect that all the plays of Shakspeare, before they reached the press, had passed through a dangerous medium, and probably experienced the injudicious curtailments to which too many dramatic pieces are still exposed, from the ignorance, caprice, and presumption of transcribers, players, and managers. STEEVENS.

<sup>21</sup> ——— you do blench from this to that,] To blench is to start off, to fly off. So, in Hamlet:

“ ——— if he but blench,

“ I know my course.” STEEVENS.

Come, we will walk : There's other of our friends
Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E VI.

Street near the City Gate.

Enter ISABELLA and MARIANA.

ISAB. To speak so indirectly, I am loth;
I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part: yet I'm advis'd to do it;
He says, to veil full purpose.<sup>3</sup>

MARI.

Be rul'd by him.

ISAB. Besides, he tells me, that, if peradventure
He speak against me on the adverse side,

<sup>3</sup> He says, to veil full purpose.] Mr. Theobald alters it to,

He says, t' availful purpose;

because he has no idea of the common reading. A good reason!
Yet the common reading is right. Full is used for beneficial; and the meaning is, He says, it is to hide a beneficial purpose, that must not yet be revealed. WARBURTON.

To veil full purpose, may, with very little force on the words, mean, to hide the whole extent of our design, and therefore the reading may stand; yet I cannot but think Mr. Theobald's alteration either lucky or ingenious. To interpret words with such laxity, as to make full the same with beneficial, is to put an end, at once, to all necessity of emendation, for any word may then stand in the place of another. JOHNSON.

I think Theobald's explanation right, but his amendment unnecessary.
We need only read vailful as one word. Shakspeare, who so frequently uses cite for excite, bate for abate, force for enforce, and many other abbreviations of a similar nature, may well be supposed to use vailful for availful. M. MASON.

If Dr. Johnson's explanation be right, (as I think it is,) the word should be written — veil, as it is now printed in the text.

That vail was the old spelling of veil, appears from a line in
The Merchant of Venice, folio, 1623:

“ Vailing an Indian beauty — ”

for which in the modern editions veiling has been rightly substituted. MALONE.

I should not think it strange; for 'tis a phyfick,
That's bitter to fweet end.

MARI. I would, friar Peter —

ISAB. O, peace; the friar is come.

Enter Friar PETER. <sup>4</sup>

F. PETER. Come, I have found you out a ftand moft fit,
Where you may have fuch vantage on the duke,
He fhall not pafs you: Twice have the trumpets
founded;
The generous <sup>5</sup> and graveft citizens
Have hent the gates, <sup>6</sup> and very near upon
The duke is ent'ring; therefore hence, away.
[Exeunt.]

<sup>4</sup> Enter Friar Peter.] This play has two friars, either of whom might fingly have ferved. I fhould therefore imagine, that Friar Thomas, in the firft aft, might be changed, without any harm, to Friar Peter; for why fhould the Duke unnecessarily truft two in an affair which required only one? The name of Friar Thomas is never mentioned in the dialogue, and therefore feems arbitrarily placed at the head of the fcene. JOHNSON.

" ——— the generous iflanders

" By you invited —" STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> Have hent the gates,] Have feized or taken poffeffion of the gates. JOHNSON.

So, in Sir A. Gorges' tranflation of the 4th book of Lucan:

" ——— did prevent

" His foes, ere they the hills had hent."

Again, in T. Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1630:

" Lament thee, Roman land,

" The king is from thee hent."

Again, in the black-letter Romance of Syr Eglamour of Artoys, no date:

" But with the childe homeward gan ryde

" That fro the gryffon was hent."

Painted by the Kirk.

SHAKESPEARE

Measure for Measure.

ACT V. SCENE I.

*Duke in a Friar's habit,
Varrius, Lords, Angelo, Lucio,
Lucio, and Citizens, Isabella,
Peter Mariana, Provost, &c.*

Engraved in Lorraine to Michael by G. Goussier

you halcyon, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? show your knave's courage, with a pace to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour! Will not off?

*Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke.
Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er made a duke.
Gent. I protest, let me bail these gentle three:—
Shall not away, sir; [To Lucio] for the friar and you Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.*

A C T V. S C E N E I.

A publick Place near the City Gate.

MARIANA (veil'd) ISABELLA, and PETER, at a distance. Enter at opposite doors, DUKE, VARRIUS, Lords; ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, Provost, Officers, and Citizens.

DUKE. My very worthy cousin, fairly met: —
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

ANG. and ESCAL. Happy return be to your royal grace!

DUKE. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
Fore-running more requital.

ANG. You make my bonds still greater.

DUKE. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong it,

To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time,
And razure of oblivion: Give me your hand,
And let the subjects see, to make them know

Again, in the ancient metrical Romance of Syr Guy of Warwick,
b. l. no date:

“Some by the arms hent good Guy,” &c.

Again,

“And some by the bridle him hent.”

Spenser often uses the word hend for to seize or take, and overhend for to overtake. STEEVENS.

Hent, henten, hende, (says Junius, in his Etymologicon,) Chaucer
est, capere, assequi, prehendere, arripere, ab A. S. hendan.

MALONE.

That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within.—Come, Escalus;
You must walk by us on our other hand;—
And good supporters are you.

PETER and ISABELLA come forward.

F. PETER. Now is your time; speak loud, and kneel before him.

ISAB. Justice, O royal Duke! Vail your regard<sup>7</sup>
Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said, a maid!
O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object,
Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

DUKE. Relate your wrongs: In what? By whom?
Be brief:

Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice;
Reveal yourself to him.

ISAB. O, worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me,
here.

7 — Vail your regard—] That is, withdraw your thoughts from higher things, let your notice descend upon a wronged woman. To vail is to lower. JOHNSON.

This is one of the few expressions which might have been borrowed from the old play of Promos and Cassandra, 1578:

“ — vail thou thine ears.”

So, in Stanyhurst's translation of the 4th Book of Virgil's Æneid:

“ — Phrygio liceat servire marito.”

“ Let Dido vail her heart to bed-fellow Trojan.”

STEEVENS.

Thus also, in Hamlet:

“ Do not for ever, with thy vailed lids,

“ Seek for thy noble father in the dust.” HENLEY.

ANG. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm :
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice.

ISAB. By course of justice!

ANG. And she will speak most bitterly, and strange.

ISAB. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak :
That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer; is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange, and strange?

DUKE. Nay, it is ten times strange.

ISAB. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Than this is all as true as it is strange :
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.<sup>8</sup>

DUKE. Away with her:—Poor soul,
She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

ISAB. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness: make not impossible

That which but seems unlike : 'tis not impossible,
But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> ——— truth is truth

To the end of reckoning.] That is, truth has no gradations; nothing which admits of encrease can be so much what it is, as truth is truth. There may be a strange thing, and a thing more strange, but if a proposition be true, there can be none more true.

JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> ——— as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,] As shy; as reserved, as abstracted: as just; as nice, as exact: as absolute; as complete in all the round of duty. JOHNSON.

As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
 In all his dressings,<sup>2</sup> characts,<sup>3</sup> titles, forms,
 Be an arch-villain: believe it, royal prince,
 If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
 Had I more name for badness.

DUKE. By mine honesty,
 If she be mad, (as I believe no other,)
 Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
 Such a dependency of thing on thing,
 As e'er I heard in madness.<sup>4</sup>

ISAB. O, gracious duke,
 Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason
 For inequality:<sup>5</sup> but let your reason serve

TYRWHITT.

So, in Gower, De Confessione Amantis, B. I:

"With his carecte would him enchaunt."

Again, B. V. fol. 103:

"And read his carecte in the wife."

Again, B. VI. fol. 140:

"Through his carectes and figures."

Again:

"And his carecte as he was taught,

"He rad," &c. STEEVENS.

Charact signifies an inscription. The stat. 1 Edward VI. c. 2. directed the seals of office of every bishop to have "certain characts under the king's arms, for the knowledge of the diocese." Characters are the letters in which the inscription is written. Charactery is the materials of which characters are composed.

"Fairies use flowers for their charactery."

Merry Wives of Windsor. BLACKSTONE.

<sup>4</sup> As e'er I heard, &c.] I suppose Shakspeare wrote:

As ne'er I heard in madness. MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> ——— do not banish reason

For inequality:] Let not the high quality of my adversary prejudice you against me. JOHNSON.

To make the truth appear, where it seems hid;
And hide the false, seems true. <sup>6</sup>

DUKE. Many that are not mad,
Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you say?

ISAB. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo:
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother: One Lucio
As then the messenger;—

LUCIO. That's I, an't like your grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her
To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo,
For her poor brother's pardon.

ISAB. That's he, indeed.

DUKE. You were not bid to speak.

LUCIO. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

DUKE. I wish you now then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have

Inequality appears to me to mean, in this place, apparent inconsistency; and to have no reference to the high rank of Angelo, as Johnson supposes. M. MASON.

I imagine the meaning rather is — Do not suppose I am mad, because I speak passionately and unequally. MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> And hide the false, seems true.] And for ever hide, i. e. plunge into eternal darkness, the false one, i. e. Angelo, who now seems honest. Many other words would have expressed our poet's meaning better than hide; but he seems to have chosen it merely for the sake of opposition to the preceding line. Mr. Theobald unnecessarily reads — Not hide the false, — which has been followed by the subsequent editors. MALONE.

I do not profess to understand these words; nor can I perceive how the meaning suggested by Mr. Malone is to be deduced from them. STEEVENS.

A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then
Be perfect.

LUCIO. I warrant your honour.

DUKE. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it.

ISAB. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

LUCIO. Right.

DUKE. It may be right; but you are in the wrong
To speak before your time.—Proceed.

ISAB. I went
To this pernicious caitiff deputy.

DUKE. That's somewhat madly spoken.

ISAB. Pardon it;
The phrase is to the matter.

DUKE. Mended again: the matter;—Proceed.

ISAB. In brief,—to set the needless process by,
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me,<sup>7</sup> and how I reply'd;
(For this was of much length,) the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust,<sup>8</sup>
Release my brother; and, after much debatement,
My sisterly remorse<sup>9</sup> confutes mine honour,

<sup>7</sup> How he refell'd me, ] To refel is to refute.

“ Refellere & coarguere mendacium. ” Cicero pro Ligario.

Ben Jonson uses the word:

“ Friends not to refel you,

“ Or any way quell you. ”

Again, in The Second Part of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601:

“ Therefore go on, young Bruce, proceed, refell

“ The allegation. ”

The modern editors changed the word to repel. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> My sisterly remorse — ] i. e. pity. So, in King Richard III:

“ And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. ” STEEVENS.

And I did yield to him: But the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, <sup>2</sup> he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.

DUKE. This is most likely!

ISAB. O, that it were as like, as it is true! <sup>3</sup>

DUKE. By heaven, fond wretch, <sup>4</sup> thou know'st not what thou speak'st;

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour,
In hateful practice: <sup>5</sup> First, his integrity
Stands without blemish:—next, it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself,

<sup>2</sup> His purpose surfeiting,] Thus the old copy. We might read forfeiting, but the former word is too much in the manner of Shakspeare to be rejected. So, in Othello:

“ — my hopes not surfeited to death.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> O, that it were as like, as it is true!] Like is not here used for probable, but for seemly. She catches at the Duke's word, and turns it into another sense; of which there are a great many examples in Shakspeare, and the writers of that time. WARBURTON.

I do not see why like may not stand here for probable, or why the lady should not wish, that since her tale is true, it may obtain belief. If Dr. Warburton's explication be right, we should read:

O! that it were as likely, as 'tis true!

Likely I have never found for seemly. JOHNSON.

Though I concur in Dr. Johnson's explanation, I cannot help observing that likely is used by Shakspeare himself for seemly. So, in King Henry IV. Part II. Act III. sc. ii: “ Sir John, they are your likeliest men.” STEEVENS.

The meaning, I think, is: O that it had as much of the appearance, as it has of the reality, of truth! MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> — fond wretch,] Fond wretch is foolish wretch. So, in Coriolanus. Act IV. sc. i:

“ 'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> In hateful practice:] Practice was used by the old writers for any unlawful or insidious stratagem. So again:

“ This must needs be practice.”

And again:

“ Let me have way to find this practice out.” JOHNSON.

And not have cut him off: Some one hath set you on;
 Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
 Thou cam'st here to complain.

ISAB.

And is this all?

Then, oh, you blessed ministers above,
 Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time,
 Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up
 In countenance! <sup>6</sup>—Heaven shield your grace from woe,

As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!

DUKE. I know, you'd fain be gone:—An officer!
 To prison with her:—Shall we thus permit
 A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
 On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.<sup>7</sup> —Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?

ISAB. One that I would were here, friar Lodowick.

DUKE. A ghostly father, belike:—Who knows that Lodowick?

LUCIO. My lord, I know him; 'tis a meddling
 friar;

I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
 For certain words he spake against your grace
 In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.

DUKE. Words against me? This' a good friar, belike!

Countenance, in my opinion, does not mean partial favour, as Warburton supposes, but false appearance, hypocrisy. Isabella does not mean to accuse the Duke of partiality; but alludes to the sanctified demeanour of Angelo, which, as she supposes, prevented the Duke from believing her story. 'M. MASON.

<sup>7</sup> — practice.] Practice, in Shakspeare, very often means shameful artifice, unjustifiable stratagem. So, in King Lear:

“ — This is practice, Gloucester.”

Again, in King John:

“ It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,

“ The practice and the purpose of the king.” STEEVENS.

And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute! — Let this friar be found!

LUCIO. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar
I saw them at the prison: a sawcy friar,
A very scurvy fellow.

F. PETER. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abus'd: First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute;
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungot.

DUKE. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?

F. PETER. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary medler,<sup>s</sup>
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.

LUCIO. My lord, most villainously; believe it.

F. PETER. Well, he in time may come to clear himself;

But at this instant he is sick, my lord,

<sup>s</sup> — nor a temporary medler,] It is hard to know what is meant by a temporary medler. In its usual sense, as opposed to perpetual, it cannot be used here. It may stand for temporal: the sense will then be, I know him for a holy man, one that meddles not with secular affairs. It may mean temporising: I know him to be a holy man, one who would not temporise, or take the opportunity of your absence to defame you. Or we may read:

Not scurvy, nor a tamperer and medler:
not one who would have tampered with this woman to make her a false evidence against your deputy. JOHNSON.

Peter here refers to what Lucio had before affirmed concerning Friar Lodowick. Hence it is evident that the phrase "temporary medler," was intended to signify one who introduced himself, as often as he could find opportunity, into other men's concerns. See the context. HENLEY.

Of a strange fever: Upon his mere request,<sup>9</sup>
 (Being come to knowledge that there was complaint Intended 'gainst lord Angelo,) came I hither,
 To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
 Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
 And all probation, will make up full clear,
 Whensoever, he's convented.<sup>2</sup> First, for this woman;
 (To justify this worthy nobleman,
 So vulgarly<sup>3</sup> and personally accus'd,)

<sup>9</sup> — his mere request,] i. e. his absolute request. So, in Julius Cæsar:
 "Some mere friends, some honourable Romans."

Again, in Othello:

"The mere perdition of the Turkish fleet." STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> Whensoever he's convented.] The first folio reads, convented, and this is right: for to convene signifies to assemble; but convent, to cite, or summons. Yet because convented hurts the measure, the Oxford editor sticks to conven'd, though it be nonsense, and signifies, Whenever he is assembled together. But thus it will be, when the author is thinking of one thing, and his critic of another. The poet was attentive to his sense, and the editor quite throughout his performance, to nothing but the measure; which Shakspeare having entirely neglected, like all the dramatic writers of that age, he has spruced him up with all the exactness of a modern measurer of syllables. This being here taken notice of once for all, shall, for the future, be forgot, as if it had never been.

WARBURTON.

The foregoing account of the measure of Shakspeare, and his contemporaries, ought indeed to be forgotten, because it is untrue.

To convent is no uncommon word. So, in Woman's a Weathercock, 1612:

"—— left my looks

"Should tell the company convented there," &c.

To convent and to convene are derived from the same Latin verb, and have exactly the same meaning. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> So vulgarly—] Meaning either so grossly, with such indecency of invective, or by so mean and inadequate witnesses. JOHNSON.

Vulgarly, I believe, means publickly. The vulgar are the common people. Daniel uses vulgarly for among the common people:

"—— and which pleases vulgarly." STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens's interpretation is certainly the true one. So, in The Comedy of Errors, Act III. sc. i:

Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

DUKE.

Good friar, let's hear it.

[ISABELLA is carried off, guarded; and MARIANA comes forward.]

Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo? —
O heaven! the vanity of wretched fools! —
Give us some seats. — Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. <sup>4</sup> — Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face; <sup>5</sup> and after speak.

“ A vulgar comment will be made of it;

“ And that supposed by the common rout, —

“ That may,” &c.

Again, in Twelfth Night:

“ — for 'tis a vulgar proof,

“ That very oft we pity enemies.” MALONE.

In this I'll be impartial; be you judge

Of your own cause.] Surely, says Mr. Theobald, this duke had odd notions of impartiality! He reads therefore, — I will be partial, and all the editors follow him: even Mr. Heath declares the observation unanswerable. But see the uncertainty of criticism! impartial was sometimes used in the sense of partial. In the old play of Swetham, the Woman Hater, Atlanta cries out, when the judges decree against the women:

“ You are impartial, and we do appeal

“ From you to judges more indifferent.” FARMER.

So, in Marston's Antonio and Mellida, 2d Part, 1602:

“ There's not a beauty lives,

“ Hath that impartial predominance

“ O'er my affects, as your enchanting graces.”

Again, in Romeo and Juliet, 1597:

“ Cruel, unjust, impartial destinies! ”

Again:

“ — this day, this unjust, impartial day. ”

In the language of our author's time im was frequently used as an augmentative or intensive particle. MALONE.

<sup>5</sup> — her face;] The original copy reads — your face. The emendation was made by the editor of the second folio.

MALONE.

MARI. Pardon, my lord ; I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.

DUKE. What, are you married?

MARI. No, my lord.

DUKE. Are you a maid?

MARI. No, my lord.

DUKE. A widow then?

MARI. Neither, my lord.

DUKE. Why, you
Are nothing then:—Neither maid, widow, nor wife?<sup>6</sup>

LUCIO. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

DUKE. Silence that fellow; I would, he had some cause.

To prattle for himself.

LUCIO. Well, my lord.

MARI. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;
And, I confess, besides, I am no maid;
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows not,

That ever he knew me.

LUCIO. He was drunk then, my lord; it can be no better.

DUKE. For the benefit of silence, 'would thou wert so too.

LUCIO. Well, my lord.

DUKE. This is no witness for lord Angelo.

MARI. Now I come to't, my lord:
She, that accuses him of fornication,

<sup>6</sup> Neither maid, widow, nor wife? } This is a proverbial phrase,
to be found in Ray's Collection. STEEVENS.

In self-same manner doth accuse my husband ;
And charges him, my lord, with such a time,
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms,
With all the effect of love.

ANG. Charges she more than me?

MARI. Not that I know.

DUKE. No? you say, your husband.

MARI. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks, he knows, that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows, he thinks, that he knows Isabel's.

ANG. This is a strange abuse: <sup>7</sup>—Let's see thy face.

MARI. My husband bids me; now I will unmask.
[Unveiling.]

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which, once thou swor'st, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine: this is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house, <sup>8</sup>
In her imagin'd person.

<sup>7</sup> This is a strange abuse:] Abuse stands in this place for deception or puzzle. So, in Macbeth:

“ my strange and self abuse.”
means, this strange deception of myself. JOHNSON.

<sup>8</sup> And did supply thee at thy garden-house,] A garden-house in the time of our author was usually appropriated to purposes of intrigue. So, in SKIALETHIA, or a shadow of truth, in certain Epigrams and Satyres, 1598:

“ Who, coming from the CURTAIN, sneaketh in

“ To some old garden noted house for sin.”

Again, in The London Prodigal, a comedy, 1605: “ Sweet lady, if you have any friend, or garden-house, where you may employ a poor gentleman as your friend, I am yours to command in all secret service.” MALONE.

See also an extract from Stubbes's Anatomie of Abuses, 4to, 1597, p. 57; quoted in Vol. V. of Doddsley's Old Plays, edit. 1780, p. 74.
REED.

DUKE. Know you this woman?

LUCIO. Carnally, she says.

DUKE. Sirrah, no more.

LUCIO. Enough, my lord.

ANG. My lord, I must confess, I know this woman;
And, five years since, there was some speech of marriage

Betwixt myself and her: which was broke off,
Partly, for that her promised proportions
Came short of composition; <sup>9</sup> but, in chief,
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity: since which time, of five years,
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honour.

MARI. Noble prince,
As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath,

As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue,
I am affianc'd this man's wife, as strongly
As words could make up vows: and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone, in his garden-house,
He knew me as a wife: As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees;
Or else for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument!

ANG. I did but smile till now;
Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touch'd: I do perceive,
These poor informal women <sup>2</sup> are no more

Came short of composition;] Her fortune, which was promised proportionate to mine, fell short of the composition, that is, contract or bargain. JOHNSON.

<sup>2</sup> These poor informal women—] Informal signifies out of their senses. In The Comedy of Errors, we meet with these lines:

But instruments of some more mightier member,
That sets them on: Let me have way, my lord,
To find this practice out.

DUKE.

Ay, with my heart;

And punish them unto your height of pleasure.—
Thou foolish friar; and thou pernicious woman, Compact with her that's gone! think'st thou, thy oaths,

Though they would swear down each particular faint,<sup>3</sup>

Were testimonies against his worth and credit,
That's seal'd in approbation?<sup>4</sup> — You, lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
To find out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd. —
There is another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.

F. PETER. Would he were here, my lord; for he,
indeed,

Hath set the women on to this complaint:

“ — I will not let him stir,

“ Till I have us'd the approved means I have,

“ With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,

“ To make of him a formal man again.”

Formal, in this passage, evidently signifies in his senses. The lines are spoken of Antipholus of Syracuse, who is behaving like a mad-man. Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

“ Thou shouldst come like a fury crown'd with snakes,

“ Not like a formal man.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> Though they would swear down each particular saint.] So, in Antony and Cleopatra, Act I. sc. iii:

“ Though you in sweating shake the throned gods.”

STEEVENS,

<sup>4</sup> That's seal'd in approbation?] When any thing subject to counterfeits is tried by the proper officers and approved, a stamp or seal is put upon it, as among us on plate, weights, and measures. So the Duke says, that Angelo's faith has been tried, approved, and seal'd in testimony of that approbation, and, like other things so sealed, is no more to be called in question. JOHNSON.

Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

DUKE. Go, do it instantly. — [Exit Provost.
And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,<sup>4</sup>
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
In any chastisement: I for a while
Will leave you; but stir not you, till you have well
Determined upon these slanderers.

ESCAL. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly. — [Exit.
DUKE.] Signior Lucio, did not you say, you knew that friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

LUCIO. Cucullus non facit monachum: honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

ESCAL. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

LUCIO. As any in Vienna, on my word.

ESCAL. Call that same Isabel here once again;
[To an Attendant.] I would speak with her: Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

LUCIO. Not better than he, by her own report.

ESCAL. Say you?

LUCIO. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess; perchance, publickly she'll be ashamed.

Re-enter Officers, with ISABELLA; the DUKE, in the Friar's habit, and Provost.

ESCAL. I will go darkly to work with her.

<sup>4</sup> — to hear this matter forth,] To hear it to the end; to search it to the bottom. JOHNSON.

LUCIO. That's the way ; for women are light at midnight. <sup>5</sup>

ESCAL. Come on, mistress ; [To ISABELLA.] here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

LUCIO. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of ; here with the provost.

ESCAL. In very good time : — speak not you to him, till we call upon you.

LUCIO. Mum.

ESCAL. Come, sir, Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo ? they have confess'd you did.

DUKE. 'Tis false.

ESCAL. How ! know you where you are ?

DUKE. Respect to your great place ! and let the devil

Be sometimes honour'd for his burning throne :<sup>6</sup> — Where is the duke ? 'tis he should hear me speak.

ESCAL. The duke's in us ; and we will hear you speak :

Look, you speak justly.

DUKE. Boldly, at least : — But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox ? Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone ?

<sup>5</sup> — are light at midnight.] This is one of the words on which Shakspeare chiefly delights to quibble. Thus, Portia in The Merchant of Venice, A & V. sc. i:

“ Let me give light, but let me not be light.” STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> Respect to your great place ! and let the devil, &c.] I suspect that a line preceding this has been lost. MALONE.

I suspect no omission. Great place has reference to the preceding question — “ know you where you are ? ”

Shakspeare was a reader of Philemon Holland's translation of Pliny ; and in the fifth book and eighth chapter, might have met with his next idea : “ The Augylæ do no worship to any but to the devils beneath.” STEEVENS.

Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,<sup>7</sup>
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse.

LUCIO. This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

ESCAL. Why, thou unreverend and unhallow'd
friar!

Is't not enough, thou hast suborn'd these women
To accuse this worthy man; but, in foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain?

And then to glance from him to the duke himself;
To tax him with injustice? — Take him hence;
To the rack with him: — We'll touze you joint by joint,

But we will know this purpose:<sup>8</sup> — What! unjust?

DUKE. Be not so hot; the duke
Dare no more stretch this finger of mine, than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not,
Nor here provincial:<sup>9</sup> My business in this state

<sup>7</sup> — to retort your manifest appeal,] To refer back to Angelo the cause in which you appealed from Angelo to the Duke.

JOHNSON.

<sup>8</sup> — this purpose:] The old copy has — his purpose. The emendation was made by Sir T. Hanmer. I believe the passage has been corrected in the wrong place; and would read:

—— We'll touze him joint by joint,

But we will know his purpose. MALONE.

The different orders of monks have a chief, who is called the General of the order; and they have also superiors, subordinate to the general, in the several provinces through which the order may be dispersed. The Friar therefore means to say, that the Duke dares not touch a finger of his, for he could not punish him by his own authority, as he was not his subject, nor through that of the superior, as he was not of that province. M. MASON.

Made me a looker-on here in Vienna,
Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew; <sup>2</sup> laws, for all faults;
But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, <sup>3</sup>
As much in mock as mark.

Till it o'er-run the stew: ] I fear that, in the present instance, our author's metaphor is from the kitchen. So, in Macbeth:

"Like a hell-broth, boil and bubble." STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, ] Barbers' shops were, at all times, the resort of idle people:

"Tonstrina erat quædam: hic solebamus ferè

"Plerumque eam opperiri" —.

which Donatus calls apta sedes otiosis. Formerly with us, the better sort of people went to the barber's shop to be trimmed; who then practised the under parts of surgery: so that he had occasion for numerous instruments, which lay there ready for use; and the idle people, with whom his shop was generally crowded, would be perpetually handling and misusing them. To remedy which, I suppose there was placed up against the wall a table of forfeitures, adapted to every offence of this kind; which, it is not likely, would long preserve its authority. WARBURTON.

This explanation may serve till a better is discovered. But whoever has seen the instruments of a surgeon, knows that they may be very easily kept out of improper hands in a very small box, or in his pocket. JOHNSON.

It was formerly part of a barber's occupation to pick the teeth and ears. So, in the old play of Herod and Antipater, 1622, Tryphon the barber, enters with a case of instruments, to each of which he addresses himself separately:

"Toothpick, dear toothpick; earpick, both of you

"Have been her sweet companions! —" &c.

I have conversed with several people who had repeatedly read the list of forfeits alluded to by Shakspeare, but have failed in my endeavours to procure a copy of it. The metrical one, published by the late Dr. Kenrick, was a forgery. STEEVENS.

I believe Dr. Warburton's explanation in the main to be right, only that instead of surgical instruments, the barber's prohibited implements were principally his razors; his whole stock of which, from the number and impatience of his customers on a Saturday night or a market morning, being necessarily laid out for use, were ESCAL. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.

ANG. What can you vouch against him, signior Lucio?

Is this the man, that you did tell us of?

LUCIO. 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither, good-man bald-pate: Do you know me?

DUKE. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

LUCIO. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

DUKE. Most notedly, sir.

LUCIO. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward,<sup>3</sup> as you then reported him to be?

DUKE. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

LUCIO. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

DUKE. I protest, I love the duke, as I love myself.

exposed to the idle fingers of the bye-standers, in waiting for succession to the chair.

These forfeits were as much in mock as mark, both because the barber had no authority of himself to enforce them, and also as they were of a ludicrous nature. I perfectly remember to have seen them in Devonshire (printed like King Charles's Rules,) though I cannot recollect their contents. HENLEY.

<sup>3</sup> — and a coward,] So again, afterwards:

You, sirrah, that know me for a fool, a coward,

One all of luxury —,

But Lucio had not, in the former conversation, mentioned cowardice among the faults of the Duke. — Such failures of memory are incident to writers more diligent than this poet. JOHNSON.

ANG. Hark! how the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses.

ESCAL. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withal:— Away with him to prison: — Where is the provost? — Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more: — Away with those giglots too, <sup>4</sup> and with the other confederate companion. [The Provost lays hands on the DUKE.]

DUKE. Stay, fir; stay a-while.

ANG. What! resists he? Help him, Lucio.

LUCIO. Come, fir; come, fir; come fir; foh, fir: Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour! Will't not off? <sup>5</sup>

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the DUKE.]

<sup>4</sup> — those giglots too,] A giglot is a wanton wench. So, in K. Henry VI. P. I.:

“ ——— young Talbot was not born

“ To be the pillage of a giglot wench.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — Show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour! Will't not off?] This is intended to be the common language of vulgar indignation. Our phrase on such occasions is simply: show your sheep-biting face and be hanged. The words an hour have no particular use here, nor are authorised by custom. I suppose it was written thus: show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged — an how? will't not off? In the midland counties, upon any unexpected obstruction or resistance, it is common to exclaim an' how?

JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson's alteration is wrong. In The Alchemist we meet with “a man that has been strangled an hour.”

“What, Piper, ho! be hang'd a-while,” is a line of an old madrigal. FARMER.

A similar expression is found in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, 1614:

“Leave the bottle behind you, and be curst a-while.”

MALONE.

Dr. Johnson is much too positive in asserting “that the words an hour have no particular use here, nor are authorised by custom,”

DUKE. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke. ———

First, Provost, let me bail these gentle three. ——— Sneak not away, sir; [To LUCIO.] for the friar and
you

Must have a word anon: — lay hold on him.

LUCIO. This may prove worse than hanging.

DUKE. What you have spoke, I pardon; sit you down. ——— [To ESCALUS.

We'll borrow place of him: — Sir, by your leave:
[To ANGALO.

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do thee office? ' If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.

ANG.

O my dread lord,

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I can be undiscernable,
When I perceive, your grace, like power divine,
Hath look'd upon my passes: ' Then, good prince,
No longer session hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confession;
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg.

as Dr. Farmer has well proved. The poet evidently refers to the ancient mode of punishing by collistrigium, or the original pillory, made like that part of the pillory at present which receives the neck, only it was placed horizontally, so that the culprit hung suspended in it by his chin, and the back of his head. A distinct account of it may be found, if I mistake not, in Mr. Barrington's Observations on the Statutes. HENLEY.

' ——— can do thee office? ] i. e. do thee service. STEEVENS.

' ——— my passes: ] i. e. what has past in my administration.
" Not so: (says the Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786.) Passes means here artful devices, deceitful contrivances. Tours de passe-passe, in French, are tricks of jugglery." STEEVENS.

DUKE.

Come hither, Mariana:—

Say, wast thou e'er contracted to his woman?

ANG. I was, my lord.

DUKE. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.—

Do you the office, friar; which consummate,<sup>7</sup>

Return him here again:—Go with him, Provost.

[Exeunt ANGELO, MARIANA, PETER, and Provost.]

ESCAL. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour,

Than at the strangeness of it.

DUKE.

Come hither, Isabel:

Your friar is now your prince: As I was then

Advertising, and holy<sup>8</sup> to your business,

Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

ISAB.

O, give me pardon,

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd

Your unknown sovereignty.

DUKE.

You are pardon'd Isabel:

And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.<sup>9</sup>

Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;

And you may marvel, why I obscur'd myself,

Labouring to save his life; and would not rather

Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,<sup>2</sup>

Than let him so be lost: O, most kind maid,

It was the swift celerity of his death,

Which I did think with slower foot came on,

<sup>7</sup> — which consummate,] i. e. which being consummated.

MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> Advertising, and holy —] Attentive and faithful. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> — be you as free to us.] Be as generous to us; pardon us as we have pardoned you. JOHNSON.

<sup>2</sup> Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,] That is, a premature discovery of it. M. MASON.

That brain'd my purpose: <sup>2</sup> But, peace be with him!
 That life is better life, past fearing death,
 Than that which lives to fear: make it your comfort,
 So happy is your brother.

Re-enter ANGELO, MARIANA, PETER, and Provost.

ISAB.

I do, my lord.

DUKE. For this new-married man, approaching
                                   here,

Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd
 Your well-defended honour, you must pardon
 For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudg'd your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation
 Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breach, <sup>3</sup>
 Thereon dependant, for your brother's life,)
 The very mercy of the law cries out
 Most audible, even from his proper tongue, <sup>4</sup>
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death.
 Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure;

<sup>2</sup> That brain'd my purpose:] We now use in conversation a like phrase: This it was that knocked my design on the head. Dr. Warburton reads:

—— baned my purpose. JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> —— and of promise-breach,] Our author ought to have written — “in double violation of sacred chastity, and of promise,” instead of — promise-breach. Sir T. Hanmer reads — and in promise-breach; but change is certainly here improper, Shakspeare having many similar inaccuracies. Double indeed may refer to Angelo's conduct to Mariana and Isabel; yet still some difficulty will remain: for then he will be said to be “criminal [instead of guilty] of promise-breach.” MALONE.

“To call him villain.” JOHNSON.

Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.<sup>5</sup>
 Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
 Which though thou would'st deny, denies thee vantage:<sup>6</sup>

We do condemn thee to the very block
 Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste:—

Away with him.

MARI. — O, my most gracious lord,
 I hope you will not mock me with a husband!

DUKE. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband:

Consenting to the safeguard of your honour,
 I thought your marriage fit; else imputation;
 For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
 And choke your good to come: for his possessions,
 Although by confiscation they are ours,<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> — Measure still for Measure.] So, in the Third Part of
K. Henry VI:

“Measure for Measure must be answered.” STEEVENS.

Shakspeare might have remembered these lines in A Warning for faire Women, a tragedy, 1599 (but apparently written some years before):

“The trial now remains, as shall conclude

“Measure for Measure, and lost blood for blood.” MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> — denies thee vantage:] Takes from thee all opportunity, all expedient of denial. WARBURTON.

Which though thou would'st deny, denies thee vantage:] The denial of which will avail thee nothing. So, in The Winter's Tale:

“Which to deny, concerns more than avails.” MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> Although by confiscation they are ours,] This reading was furnished by the editor of the second folio. The original copy has confutation, which may be right:—by his being confuted, or proved guilty of the fact which he had denied. This however being rather harsh, I have followed all the modern editors in adopting the emendation that has been made. MALONE.

I cannot think it even possible that confutation should be the true reading. But the value of the second folio, it seems, must on all occasions be disputed. STEEVENS.

We do inflate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband.

MARI. O, my dear lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man,

DUKE. Never crave him : we are definitive.

MARI. Gentle, my liege, — [Kneeling.

DUKE. You do but lose your labour :
Away with him to death. — Now, fir, [To LUCIO.]
to you.

MARI. O, my good lord ! — Sweet Isabel, take my part ;

I lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you, all my life to do you service.

DUKE. Against all sense you do importune her :
Should she kneel down, in mercy of this fact,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.

MARI. Isabel,
Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me ;
Hold up your hands, say nothing, I'll speak all.
They say, best men are moulded out of faults ;
And, for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad : so may my husband.
O, Isabel ! will you not lend a knee ?

DUKE. He dies for Claudio's death.

ISAB. Most bounteous fir, [Kneeling.

Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,

<sup>s</sup> Against all sense you do importune her :] The meaning required is, against all reason and natural affection; Shakspeare, therefore, judiciously uses a single word that implies both; sense signifying both reason and affection. JOHNSON.

The same expression occurs in The Tempest, A& II :

“ You cram these words into my ears, against

“ The stomach of my sense. STEEVENS.

As if my brother, liv'd: I partly think,
 A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
 Till he did look on me; <sup>9</sup> since it is so,
 Let him not die: My brother had but justice,
 In that he did the thing for which he died:
 For Angelo,
 His act did not o'ertake his bad intent; <sup>2</sup>
 And must be buried but as an intent
 That perish'd by the way: <sup>3</sup> thoughts are no subjects;
 Intents but merely thoughts.

<sup>9</sup> Till he did look on me;] The Duke has justly observed, that Isabel is importuned against all sense to solicit for Angelo, yet here against all sense she solicits for him. Her argument is extraordinary:

*A due sincerity govern'd his deeds
 Till he did look on me: since it is so,
 Let him not die.*

That Angelo had committed all the crimes charged against him, as far as he could commit them, is evident. The only intent which his act did not overtake, was the defilement of Isabel. Of this Angelo was only intentionally guilty.

Angelo's crimes were such, as must sufficiently justify punishment, whether its end be to secure the innocent from wrong, or to deter guilt by example; and I believe every reader feels some indignation when he finds him spared. From what extenuation of his crime, can Isabel, who yet supposes her brother dead, form any plea in his favour? Since he was good till he looked on me, let him not die. I am afraid our varlet poet intended to inculcate, that women think ill of nothing that raises the credit of their beauty, and are ready, however virtuous, to pardon any act which they think incited by their own charms. JOHNSON.

It is evident that Isabella condescends to Mariana's importunate solicitation, with great reluctance. Bad as her argument might be, it is the best that the guilt of Angelo would admit. The sacrifice that she makes of her revenge to her friendship, scarcely merits to be considered in so harsh a light. RITSON.

<sup>2</sup> His act did not o'ertake his bad intent;] So, in Macbeth:

"The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
 "Unless the deed go with it." STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— buried but as an intent

That perish'd by the way;] i. e. like the traveller, who dies on his journey, is obscurely interred, and thought of no more:

Illum expirantem ———

Obliti ignoto camporum in pulvere linquunt. STEEVENS.

MARI. Merely, my lord.

DUKE. Your suit's unprofitable; stand up, I say.—
I have bethought me of another fault:—
Provost, how came it, Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour?

PROV. It was commanded so.

DUKE. Had you a special warrant for the deed?

PROV. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

DUKE. For which I do discharge you of your office:

Give up your keys.

PROV. Pardon me, noble lord:

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;

Yet did repent me, after more advice: <sup>3</sup>

For testimony whereof, one in the prison,

That should by private order else have died,

I have reserv'd alive.

DUKE. What's he?

PROV. His name is Barnardine.

DUKE. I would thou had'st done so by Claudio.—
Go, fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.]

ESCAL. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgement afterward.

ANG. I am sorry, that such sorrow I procure:
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

<sup>3</sup> — after more advice: ] i. e. after more mature consideration.
So, in Titus Andronicus:

“ The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax. ” STEEVENS.

Re-enter Provost, BARNARDINE, CLAUDIO, and JULIET.

DUKE. Which is that Barnardine?

PROV.

This, my lord,

DUKE. There was a friar told me of this man: —
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar'st thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd;

But, for those earthly faults, <sup>4</sup> I quit them all;
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come: — Friar, advise him;
I leave him to your hand. — What muffled fellow's that?

PROV. This is another prisoner, that I sav'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head:
As like almost to Claudio, as himself.

[Unmuffles CLAUDIO.]

DUKE. If he be like your brother, [To ISABELLA.] for his sake

Is he pardon'd; And, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that.
By this, lord Angelo perceives he's safe; <sup>5</sup>
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye: —
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well: <sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> — for those earthly faults,] Thy faults, so far as they are punishable on earth, so far as they are cognisable by temporal power, I forgive. JOHNSON.

<sup>5</sup> — perceives he's safe;] It is somewhat strange that Isabella is not made to express either gratitude, wonder, or joy, at the sight of her brother. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> — your evil quits you well;] Quits you, recompenses, requites you. JOHNSON.

Look that you love your wife; <sup>7</sup> her worth, worth yours. <sup>8</sup> —

I find an apt remission in myself:

And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon; <sup>9</sup> —

You, firrah, [To LUCIO.] that knew me for a fool,
a coward,

One all of luxury, <sup>2</sup> an afs, a madman;

Wherein have I so deserved of you,

That you extol me thus?

LUCIO. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick: <sup>3</sup> If you will hang me for it, you may,

<sup>7</sup> Look, that you love your wife;] So, in Promos, &c.

This reading is adopted by Dr. Warburton, but for what reason? How does her worth work Angelo's worth? it has only contributed to work his pardon. The words are, as they are too frequently, an affected gingle; but the sense is plain. Her worth, worth yours; that is, her value is equal to your value, the match is not unworthy of you. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> — here's one in place I cannot pardon;] The Duke only means to frighten Lucio, whose final sentence is to marry the woman whom he had wronged, on which all his other punishments are remitted. STEEVENS.

“To't, luxury, pellmell, for I lack soldiers.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — according to the trick;] To my custom, my habitual practice. JOHNSON.

Lucio does not say my trick, but the trick; nor does he mean to excuse himself by saying that he spoke according to his usual practice, for that would be an aggravation to his guilt, but according to the trick and practice of the times. It was probably then the practice, as it is at this day, for the dissipated and profligate, to ridicule and slander persons in high station, or of superior virtue. M. MASON.

According to the trick, is, according to the fashion of thoughtless youth. So, in Love's Labour's Lost: “— yet I have a trick of <sup>5</sup> Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:] I have always thought that there is great confusion in this concluding speech. If my criticism would not be censured as too licentious, I should regulate it thus:

Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness,

Thanks, Provost, for thy care and secrecy;

We shall employ thee in a worthier place,

Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home

The head of Ragozine for Claudio's.

Duke. There's more behind

That is more grate. Dear Isabel,

I have a motion, &c. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> — that is more grate.] i. e. to be more rejoiced in; meaning, I suppose, that there is another world, where he will find yet greater reason to rejoice in consequence of his upright ministry. Escalus is represented as an ancient nobleman, who, in conjunction with Angelo, had reached the highest office of the state. He therefore could not be sufficiently rewarded here; but is necessarily referred to a future and more exalted recompense.

STEEVENS.

I cannot approve of Steeven's explanation of this passage, which is very far-fetched indeed. The Duke gives Escalus thanks for his much goodness, but tells him that he had some other reward in store for him, more acceptable than thanks; which agrees with what he said before, in the beginning of this act:

“ — — we hear

“ Such goodness of your justice, that our soul

“ Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,

“ Fore-running more requital.” M. MASON.

Heywood also in his Apology for Actors, 1612, uses to grate, in the sense of to reward. “ I could not chuse but grate your honest endeavours with this remembrance.” MALONE.

Mr. M. Mason's explanation may be right; but he forgets that the speech he brings in support of it, was delivered before the denouement of the scene, and was, at that moment, as much addressed to Angelo as to Escalus; and for Angelo the Duke had certainly no reward or honours, in store. — Besides, I cannot but regard the word—requital as an interpolation, because it destroys the measure, without improvement of the sense. “Fore-running more,” therefore, would only signify — preceding further thanks. STEEVENS.

The head of Ragozine for Claudio's;

<sup>7</sup> I cannot help taking notice with how much judgement Shakspeare has given turns to this story from what he found it in Cynthio Giraldi's novel. In the first place, the brother is there actually executed, and the governour sends his head in a bravado to the sister, after he had debauched her on promise of marriage: a circumstance of too much horror and villainy for the stage. And, in the next place, the sister afterwards is, to solder up her disgrace, married to the governour, and begs his life of the emperor, though he had unjustly been the death of her brother. Both which absurdities the poet has avoided by the episode of Mariana, a creature purely of his own invention. The Duke's remaining incognito at home to supervise the conduct of his deputy, is also entirely our author's fiction.

This story was attempted for the scene before our author was fourteen years old, by one George Whetstone, in Two Comical Discourses, as they are called, containing the right excellent and famous history of Promos and Cassandra, printed with the black letter, 1578. The author going that year with Sir Humphrey Gilbert to Norimbega, left them with his friends to publish.

THEOBALD.

The novel of Cynthio Giraldi, from which Shakspeare is supposed to have borrowed this fable, may be read in Shakspeare illustrated, elegantly translated, with remarks which will assist the enquirer to discover how much absurdity Shakspeare has admitted or avoided.

I cannot but suspect that some other had new-modelled the novel of Cynthio, or written a story which in some particulars resembled it, and that Cynthio was not the author whom Shakspeare immediately followed. The Emperor in Cynthio is named Maximine; the Duke, in Shakspeare's enumeration of the persons of the drama, is called Vincentio. This appears a very slight remark; but since the Duke has no name in the play, nor is ever mentioned but by his title, why should he be called Vincentio among the persons, but because the name was copied from the story, and placed superfluously at the head of the list by the mere habit of transcription? It is therefore likely that there was then a story of Vincentio Duke of Vienna, different from that of Maximine Emperor of the Romans.

Of this play the light or comic part is very natural and pleasing, but the grave scenes, if a few passages be excepted, have more labour than elegance. The plot is rather intricate than artful. The time of the action is indefinite; some time, we know not how much, must have elapsed between the recess of the Duke and the imprisonment of Claudio; for he must have learned the story of Mariana in his disguise, or he delegated his power to a man already known to be corrupted. The unities of action and place are sufficiently preserved. JOHNSON.

The duke probably had learnt the story of Mariana in some of his former retirements, "having ever loved the life removed." (Page 29) "And he had a suspicion that Angelo was but a seemer, (page 33) and therefore he stays to watch him." BLACKSTONE.

The Fable of Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578.

"The Argument of the whole History."

"In the cyttie of Julio (sometimes under the dominion of Corvinus kynge of Hungarie and Bohemia,) there was a law, that what man so ever committed adultery should lose his head, and the woman offender should weare some disguised apparel, during her life, to make her infamously noted. This severe lawe, by the favour of some mercifull magistrate, became little regarded, untill the time of lord Promos' authority; who, conviding a young gentleman named Andrugio of incontineney, condemned both him and his minion to the execution of this statute. Andrugio had a very virtuous and beautiful gentlewoman to his sister, named Cassandra: Cassandra, to enlarge her brother's life, submitted an humble petition to the lord Promos: Promos regarding her good behaviours, and fantasying her great beawtie, was much delighted with the sweete order of her talke; and doying good, that evill might come thereof, for a time he repyved her brother: but wicked man, touning his liking into unlawfull lust, he set downe the spoile of her honor, raunsome for her brother's life: chaste Cassandra, abhorring both him and his sute, by no perswasion would yeald to this raunsome. But in fine, wonne by the importunitie of hir brother (pleading for life), upon these conditions she agreed to Promos. First, that he should pardon her brother, and after marry her. Promos, as feareles in promisse, as carelesse in performance, with sollemne vowe sygned her conditions; but worse then any infydell, his will satisfyed, he performed neither the one nor the other: for to keepe his audoritye unspotted with favour, and to prevent Cassandra's clamors, he commanded the gayler secretly, to present Cassandra with her brother's head. The gayler, [touched] with the outcryes of Andrugio, (abhorryng Promos' lewdenes) by the providence of God provided thus for his safety. He presented Cassandra with a felon's head newlie executed; who knew it not, being mangled, from her brother's (who was set at libertie by the gayler). [She] was so agreeved at this trecherye, that, at the point to kyl her self, she spared that stroke, to be avenged of Promos: and devysing a way, she concluded, to make her fortunes knowne unto the kinge. She, executing this resolution, was so highly favoured of the king, that forthwith he hasted to do justice on Promos: whose judgment was, to marry Cassandra, to repaire her crased honour; which donne, for his hainous offence, he should lose his head. This maryage solempnised, Cassandra tyed in the greatest bondes of affection to her husband, became an earnest suter for his life: the kinge, tendinge the generall benefit of the comon weale before her special case, although he favoured her much, would not graunt her sute. Andrugio (disguised amonge the company) sorrowing the grieve of his sister, bewrayde his safety, and craved pardon. The kinge, to renowne the vertues of Cassandra, pardoned both him and Promos. The circumstances of this rare historye, in adion livelye foloweth."

Whetstone, however, has not afforded a very correct analysis of his play, which contains a mixture of comick scenes, between a Bawd, a Pimp, Felons, &c. together with some serious situations which are not described. STEEVENS.

One paragraph of the foregoing narrative being strangely confused in the old copy, by some carelesness of the printer, I have endeavoured to rectify it, by transposing a few words, and adding two others, which are included within crotchets.

* MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. ] The story is taken from Ariosto, Orl. Fur. B. V. POPE.

It is true, as Mr. Pope has observed, that somewhat resembling the story of this play is to be found in the fifth book of the Orlando Furioso. In Spenser's Faery Queen, B. II. c. iv. as remote an original may be traced. A novel, however, of Belleforest, copied from another of Bandello, seems to have furnished Shakspeare with his fable, as it approaches nearer in all its particulars to the play before us, than any other performance known to be extant. I have seen so many versions from this once popular collection, that I entertain no doubt but that a great majority of the tales it comprehends, have made their appearance in an English dress. Of that particular story which I have just mentioned. viz. the 18th history in the third volume, no translation has hitherto been met with.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall, Aug. 23, 1600.

STEEVENS.

Ariosto is continually quoted for the fable of Much ado about Nothing; but I suspect yur poet to have been satisfied with the Geneura of Turberville. "The tale (says Harington) is a pretie comical matter, and hath bin written in English verse some few years past, learnedly and with good grace, by M. George Turbervil." Ariosto, fol. 1591, p. 39. FARMER.

I suppose this comedy to have been written in 1600, in which year it was printed. See An Attempt to ascertain the Order of Shakspeare's Plays, Vol. II. MALONE.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Before LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, HERO,<sup>2</sup> BEATRICE, and Others, with a Messenger.

LEON. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

MESS. He is very near by this; he was not three leagues off when I left him.

LEON. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

<sup>2</sup> Innogen, (the mother of Hero,) in the old quarto that I have seen of this play, printed in 1600, is mentioned to enter in two several scenes. The succeeding editions have all continued her name in the Dramatis Personæ. But I have ventured to expunge it; there being no mention of her through the play, no one speech address'd to her, nor one syllable spoken by her. Neither is there any one passage, from which we have any reason to determine that Hero's mother was living. It seems as if the poet had in his first plan designed such a character: which, on a survey of it, he found would be superfluous; and therefore he left it out.

THEOBALD.

The name of Hero's mother occurs also in the first folio. "Enter Leonato governor of Messina, Innogen his wife," &c. STEEVENS.

MESS. But few of any sort,<sup>3</sup> and none of name.

LEON. A victory is twice itself, when the atchiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

MESS. Much deserved on his part, and equally remember'd by Don Pedro: He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better better'd expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

LEON. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.

MESS. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> — of any sort,] Sort is rank, distinction. So, in Chapman's version of the 16th Book of Homer's Odyssey:

"A ship, and in her many a man of sort."

I incline, however, to Mr. M. Mason's easier explanation. Of any sort, says he, means of any kind whatsoever. There were but few killed of any kind, and none of rank. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.] This is judiciously expressed. Of all the transports of joy, that which is attended with tears is least offensive; because, carrying with it this mark of pain, it allays the envy that usually attends another's happiness. This he finely calls a modest joy, such a one as did not insult the observer by an indication of happiness unmixed with pain. WARBURTON.

A somewhat similar expression occurs in Chapman's version of the 10th Book of the Odyssey:

" — our eyes wore

"The same wet badge of weak humanity."

This is an idea which Shakspeare seems to have been delighted to introduce. It occurs again in Macbeth:

" — my plenteous joys,

"Wanton in fullness, seek to hide themselves

"In drops of sorrow."

A badge being the distinguishing mark worn in our author's time by the servants of noblemen, &c. on the sleeve of their liveries, with

LEON. Did he break out into tears?

MESS. In great measure.<sup>5</sup>

LEON. A kind overflow of kindness: There are no faces truer<sup>6</sup> than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

BEAT. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned<sup>7</sup> from the wars, or no?

MESS. I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any fort.<sup>8</sup>

LEON. What is he that you ask for, niece?

HERO. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

MESS. O, he is returned; and as pleasant as ever he was.

BEAT. He set up his bills here in Messina,<sup>9</sup> and his usual licence he employs the word to signify a mark or token in general. So, in Macbeth:

“ Their hands and faces were all badg’d with blood.” MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> — is signior Montanto returned —] Montante, in Spanish, is a huge two-handed sword, [a title] given, with much humour, to one [whom] the speaker would represent as a boaster or bravado.

WARBURTON.

Montanto was one of the ancient terms of the fencing-school. So, in Every Man in his Humour: “ — your punto, your reverse, your stoccata, your imbrocata, your passada, your montanto,” &c. Again, in The Merry Wives of Windsor:

“ — thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant.” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — there was none such in the army of any fort.] Not meaning there was none such of any order or degree whatever, but that there was none such of any quality above the common. WARBURTON.

<sup>9</sup> He set up his bills, &c.] So, in B. Jonson’s Every Man out of his humour, Shift says:

“ This is rare, I have set up my bills without discovery.”

Again, in Swetnam Arraign’d, 1620:

“ I have bought foils already, set up bills,

“ Hung up my two-hand sword,” &c.

challenged Cupid at the flight:<sup>9</sup> and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid,

Again, in Nash's Have with you to Saffron Walden, &c. 1596:

" ——— setting up bills, like a bearward or fencer, what fights we shall have, and what weapons she will meet me at."

The following account of one of these challenges, taken from an ancient MS. of which further mention is made in a note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, A& I. sc. i. may not be unacceptable to the inquisitive reader. "Item a challenge playde before the King's majestie (Edward VI.) at Westminster, by three maisters, Willyam Pascall, Robert Greene, and W. Browne, at seven kynde of weapons. That is to saye, the axe, the pike, the rapier and target, the rapier and cloke, and with two swords, agaynst all alyens and strangers being borne without the King's dominions, of what countrie so ever he or they were, geving them warninge by theyr bills set up by the three maisters, the space of eight weeks before the sayd challenge was playde; and it was holden four severall Sundayes one after another." It appears from the same work, that all challenges "to any maister within the realme of Englande being an Englishe man," were against the statutes of the "Noble science of Defence."

Beatrice means, that Benedick published a general challenge, like a prize-fighter. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> ——— challenged Cupid at the flight:] Flight (as Mr. Douce observes to me) does not here mean an arrow, but a sort of shooting called roving, or shooting at long lengths. The arrows used at this sport are called flight-arrows; as were those used in battle for great distances. So, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Bonduca:

" ——— not the quick rack swifter;
 " The virgin from the hated ravisher
 " Not half so fearful: not a flight drawn home,
 " A round stone from a sling, ———."

Again, in A Woman kill'd with Kindness, 1617:

" We have tied our geldings to a tree, two flight-shot off."

Again, in Middleton's Game of Chess:

" Who, as they say, discharg'd it like a flight."

Again, in The Entertainment at Causome House, &c. 1617:

" ——— it being from the park about two flight-shots in length."

Again, in The Civil Wars of Daniel, B. VIII. ft. 15:

" ——— and assign'd
 " The archers their flight-shafts to shoot away;
 " Which th' adverse side (with fleet and dimness blind,
 " Mistaken in the distance of the way,)
 " Answer with their sheaf-arrows, that came short
 " Of their intended aim, and did no hurt."

and challenged him at the bird-bolt. <sup>2</sup> — I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars?

Holinshed makes the same distinction in his account of the same occurrence, and adds, that these flights were provided on purpose. Again, in Holinshed, p. 649: "He caused the soldiers to shoot their flights towards the lord Audlies company."

Mr. Tollet observes, that the length of a flight-shot seems ascertained by a passage in Leland's Itinerary, 1769, Vol. IV. p. 44: "The passage into it at full sea is a flite-shot over, as much as the Tamise is above the bridge." — It were easy to know the length of London-bridge, and Stowe's Survey may inform the curious reader whether the river has been narrowed by embanking since the days of Leland.

Mr. Douce, however, observes, that as the length of the shot depended on the strength and skill of the archer, nothing can with certainty be determined by the passage quoted from Leland.

STEEVENS.

The flight was an arrow of a particular kind: — In the Harleian Catalogue of MSS. Vol. I. n. 69. is "a challenge of the lady Maice's servants to all comers, to be performed at Greenwiche—to shoot standart arrow, or flight." I find the title-page of an old pamphlet still more explicit — "A new post — a marke exceeding necessary for all men's arrows: whether the great man's flight, the gallant's rover, the wise man's pricke-shaft, the poor man's but-shaft, or the fool's bird-bolt." FARMER.

<sup>2</sup> — at the bird-bolt.] The bird-bolt is a short thick arrow without a point, and spreading at the extremity so much, as to leave a flat surface, about the breadth of a shilling. Such are to this day in use to kill rooks with, and are shot from a cross-bow. So, in Marston's What You Will, 1607:

" — ignorance should shoot

" His gross-knobb'd bird-bolt —."

Again, in Love in a Maze, 1632:

" — Cupid,

" Pox of his bird-bolt! Venus,

" Speak to thy boy to fetch his arrow back,

" Or strike her with a sharp one!" STEEVENS.

The meaning of the whole is — Benedick, from a vain conceit of his influence over women, challenged Cupid at roving (a particular kind of archery, in which flight-arrows are used.) In other words, he challenged him to shoot at hearts. The fool, to ridicule this piece of vanity, in his turn challenged Benedick to shoot at crows with the cross-bow and bird-bolt; an inferior kind of archery

But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

LEON. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you,<sup>2</sup> I doubt it not.

MESS. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

BEAT. You had musty victual, and he hath holp to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man, he hath an excellent stomach.

MESS. And a good soldier too, lady.

BEAT. And a good soldier to a lady; — But what is he to a lord?

BEAT. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing, — Well, we are all mortal.<sup>4</sup> used by Fools, who, for obvious reasons, were not permitted to shoot with pointed arrows: Whence the proverb — “A fool's bolt is soon shot.” DOUCE.

<sup>2</sup> — he'll be meet with you,] This is a very common expression in the midland counties, and signifies he'll be your match, he'll be even with you.

So, in TEXNOTAMIA, by B. Holiday, 1618:

“Go meet her, or else she'll be meet with me.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — stuffed with all honourable virtues.] Stuffed, in this first instance, has no ridiculous meaning. Mr. Edwards observes, that Mede in his Discourses on Scripture, speaking of Adam, says — “ — he whom God had stuffed with so many excellent qualities.” Edwards's MS.

Again, in The Winter's Tale:

“ — whom you know

“Of stuff'd sufficiency.”

Un homme bien étoffé, signifies, in French, a man in good circumstances. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing, — Well, we are all mortal.] Mr. Theobald plumed himself much on the LEON. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there is a skirmish of wit between them.

BEAT. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits<sup>5</sup> went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse;<sup>6</sup> for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to pointing of this passage; which, by the way, he might learn from D'Avenant: but he says not a word, nor any one else that I know of, about the reason of this abruption. The truth is, Beatrice starts an idea at the words stuff'd man; and prudently checks herself in the pursuit of it. A stuff'd man was one of the many cant phrases for a cuckold. In Lily's Midas, we have an inventory of Motto's moveables: "Item, says Petulus, one paire of hornes in the bride-chamber on the bed's head. — The beast's head, observes Licio; for Motto is stuff'd in the head, and these are among unmoveable goods." FARMER.

<sup>5</sup> — for of his five wits — ] In our author's time wit was the general term for intellectual powers. So, Davies on the Soul:

"Wit, seeking truth from cause to cause ascends,
 "And never rests till it the first attain;
 "Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends,
 "But never stays till it the last do gain."

And, in another part:

"But if a phrenzy do possess the brain,
 "It so disturbs and blots the forms of things,
 "As fantasy proves altogether vain,
 "And to the wit no true relation brings.
 "Then doth the wit, admitting all for true,
 "Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;" —

The wits seem to have been reckoned five, by analogy to the five senses, or the five inlets of ideas. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> — if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference, &c.] Such a one has wit enough to keep himself warm, is a proverbial expression.

So, in The Wise Woman of Hogsden, 1638: "You are the wise woman, are you? and have wit to keep yourself warm enough, I warrant you." Again, in Cynthia's Revels, by Ben Jonson:

be known a reasonable creature.—Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother. <sup>6</sup>

MESS. Is it possible?

BEAT. Very easily possible: he wears his faith <sup>7</sup> but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block. <sup>8</sup>

MESS. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books. <sup>9</sup>

“ — your whole self cannot but be perfectly wise; for your hands have wit enough to keep themselves warm. ”

To bear any thing for a difference, is a term in heraldry. So, in Hamlet, Ophelia says:

“ — you may wear your rue with a difference. ”

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — sworn brother.] i. e. one with whom he hath sworn (as was anciently the custom among adventurers) to share fortunes. See Mr. Whalley's note on — “ we'll be all three sworn-brothers to France,” in King Henry V. A& II. sc. i. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> — he wears his faith —] Not religious profession, but profession of friendship; for the speaker gives it as the reason of her asking, who was now his companion? that he had every month a new sworn brother. WARBURTON.

<sup>8</sup> — with the next block.] A block is the mould on which a hat is formed. So, in Decker's Satiromastix:

“ Of what fashion is this knight's wit? of what block ?

See a note on K. Lear, A& IV. sc. vi.

The old writers sometimes use the word block, for the hat itself.

STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> — the gentleman is not in your books.] This is a phrase used, I believe, by more than understand it. To be in one's books is to be in one's codicils or will, to be among friends set down for legacies.

JOHNSON.

I rather think that the books alluded to, are memorandum-books, like the visiting books of the present age. So, in Decker's Honest Whore, Part II. 1630:

“ I am sure her name was in my table-book once.”

Or, perhaps the allusion is to matriculation at the University. So, in Aristippus, or The Jovial Philosopher, 1630:

“ You must be matriculated, and have your name recorded in Albo Academicæ. ”

BEAT. No: an he were, I would burn my study.
But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no

Again: "What have you enrolled him in albo? Have you fully admitted him into the society? — to be a member of the body academic?"

Again: "And if I be not entred, and have my name admitted into some of their books, let," &c.

And yet I think the following passage in The Maid's Revenge, by Shirley, 1639, will sufficiently support my first supposition:

"Pox of your compliment, you were best not write in her table-books."

It appears to have been anciently the custom to chronicle the small beer of every occurrence, whether literary or domestic, in table-books.

So, in the play last quoted:

"Devolve itself! — that word is not in my table-books."

Hamlet likewise has, — "my tables," &c.

Again, in The Whore of Babylon, 1607:

"—— Campeius! — Babylon

"His name hath in her tables."

Again, in Acolastus, a comedy, 1540:

"—— We weyl haunse thee, or set thy name into our fellowship boke, with clappyng of handes," &c.

I know not exactly to what custom this last quoted passage refers, unless to the album: for just after, the same expression occurs again: that "— from henceforth thou may'st have a place worthy for thee in our whyte: from hence thou may'st have thy name written in our boke."

It should seem from the following passage in The Taming of a Shrew, that this phrase might have originated from the Herald's Office:

"A herald, Kate! oh, put me in thy books!"

After all, the following note in one of the Harleian MSS. No. 847, may be the best illustration:

"W. C. to Henry Fradsham, Gent. the owner of this book:

"Some write their fantasies in verse

"In their bookes where they friendshippe shewe,

"Wherein oft tymes they doe rehearse

"The great good will that they do owe," &c. STEEVENS.

This phrase has not been exactly interpreted. To be in a man's books, originally meant to be in the list of his retainers. Sir John Mandeville tells us, "alle the mynstrelles that comen before the great Chan ben witholden with him, as of his household, and entred in his bookes, as for his own men." FARMER.

A servant and a lover were in Cupid's Vocabulary, synonymous.

young squarer<sup>2</sup> now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

MESS. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

BEAT. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cured.

MESS. I will hold friends with you, lady.

BEAT. Do, good friend.

LEON. You will never run mad, niece.

BEAT. No, not till a hot January.

MESS. Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter Don PEDRO, attended by BALTHAZAR and others; Don JOHN, CLAUDIO, and BENEDICK.

D. PEDRO. Good signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

LEON. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace: for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but, when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

Hence perhaps the phrase — to be in a person's books — was applied equally to the lover and the menial attendant. MALONE.

There is a MS. of Lord Burleigh's, in the Marquis of Lansdowne's library, wherein, among many other household concerns, he has entered the names of all his servants, &c. DOUCE.

<sup>2</sup> — young squarer — ] A squarer I take to be a cholerick, quarrellsome fellow, for in this sense Shakspeare uses the word to square. So, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, it is said of Oberon and Titania, that they never meet but they square. So the sense may be, Is there no hot-blooded youth that will keep him company through all his mad pranks? JOHNSON.

D. PEDRO. You embrace your charge<sup>3</sup> too willingly. — I think, this is your daughter.

LEON. Her mother hath many times told me so.

BENE. Were you in doubt, fir, that you ask'd her?

LEON. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. PEDRO. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself: — Be happy, lady! for you are like an honourable father.

BENE. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders, for all Messina, as like him as she is.

BEAT. I wonder, that you will still be talking, signior Benedick; no body marks you.

BENE. What, my dear lady Disdain! are you yet living?

BEAT. Is it possible, disdain should die, while she hath such meet food to feed it, as signior Benedick?<sup>4</sup> Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

BENE. Then is courtesy a turn-coat: — But it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted: and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for, truly, I love none.

<sup>3</sup> — your charge —] That is, your burden, your incumbrance.
JOHNSON.

Charge does not mean, as Dr. Johnson explains it, burden, incumbrance, but “the person committed to your care.” So it is used in the relationship between guardian and ward. DOUCE.

<sup>4</sup> — such meet food to feed it, as signior Benedick? ] A kindred thought occurs in Coriolanus, Act II. sc. i:

“Our very priests must become mockers, if they encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are.” STEEVENS.

BEAT. A dear happiness to women; they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that; I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

BENE. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratched face.

BEAT. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were.

BENE. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

BEAT. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of yours.

BENE. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue; and so good a continuer: But keep your way o' God's name; I have done.

BEAT. You always end with a jade's trick; I know you of old.

D. PEDRO. This is the sum of all: Leonato, — signior Claudio, and signior Benedick, — my dear friend Leonato, hath invited you all. I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

LEON. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. — Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. JOHN. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

LEON. Please it your grace lead on?

I thank you:] The poet has judiciously marked the gloominess of Don John's character, by making him averse to the common forms of civility. SIR J. HAWKINS.

D. PEDRO. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

[Exeunt all but BENEDICK and CLAUDIO.

CLAUD. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

BENE. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

CLAUD. Is she not a modest young lady?

BENE. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgement? or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

CLAUD. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgement.

BENE. Why, i'faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her; that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

CLAUD. Thou thinkest, I am in sport; I pray thee, tell me truly how thou likest her.

BENE. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

CLAUD. Can the world buy such a jewel?

BENE. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow? or do you play the flouting Jack;<sup>6</sup> to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, <sup>6</sup> — the flouting Jack;] Jack, in our author's time, I know not why, was a term of contempt. So, in King Henry IV. P. I. A & III: "— the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup."

Again, in The Taming of the Shrew:

"— rascal fidler,

"And twangling Jack, with twenty such vile terms," &c.

See in Minshew's Dict. 1617: "A Jack sauce, or saucie Jack." See also Chaucer's Cant. Tales, ver. 14816, and the note, edit. Tyrwhitt. MALONE.

and Vulcan a rare carpenter?<sup>7</sup> Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?<sup>8</sup>

CLAUD. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

BENE. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, an she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

<sup>7</sup> ——— to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, &c.] I know not whether I conceive the jest here intended. Claudio hints his love of Hero. Benedick asks, whether he is serious, or whether he only means to jest, and to tell them that Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter. A man praising a pretty lady in jest, may show the quick sight of Cupid, but what has it to do with the carpentry of Vulcan? Perhaps the thought lies no deeper than this, Do you mean to tell us as new what we all know already?

JOHNSON.

I believe no more is meant by those ludicrous expressions than this. — Do you mean, says Benedick, to amuse us with improbable stories?

An ingenious correspondent, whose signature is R. W. explains the passage in the same sense, but more amply. “Do you mean to tell us that love is not blind, and that fire will not consume what is combustible?” — for both these propositions are implied in making Cupid a good hare-finder, and Vulcan (the God of fire) a good carpenter. In other words, would you convince me, whose opinion on this head is well known, that you can be in love without being blind, and can play with the flame of beauty without being scorched. STEEVENS.

I explain the passage thus: Do you scoff and mock in telling us that Cupid, who is blind, is a good hare-finder, which requires a quick eye-sight; and that Vulcan, a blacksmith, is a rare carpenter?

TOLLET.

After such attempts at decent illustration, I am afraid that he who wishes to know why Cupid is a good hare-finder, must discover it by the assistance of many quibbling allusions of the same sort, about hair and hoar, in Mercutio's song in the second A& of Romeo and Juliet. COLLINS.

<sup>8</sup> ——— to go in the song?] i. e. to join with you in your song — to strike in with you in the song. STEEVENS.

CLAUD. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

BENE. Is it come to this, i'faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? <sup>9</sup> Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i'faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. <sup>2</sup> Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don PEDRO.

D. PEDRO. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

In Painter's Palace of Pleasure, p. 233, we have the following passage: "All they that weare hornes be pardoned to weare their cappes upon their heads." HENDERSON.

In our author's time none but the inferior classes wore caps, and such persons were termed in contempt flat-caps. All gentlemen wore hats. Perhaps therefore the meaning is, — Is there not one man in the world prudent enough to keep out of that state where he must live in apprehension that his night-cap will be worn occasionally by another. So, in Othello:

"For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too." MALONE.

If this remark on the disuse of caps among people of higher rank be accurate, Sir Christopher Hatton, and other worthies of the court of Elizabeth, have been injuriously treated; for the painters of their time exhibit several of them with caps on their heads. — It should be remembered that there was a material distinction between the plain statute-caps of citizens, and the ornamented ones worn by gentlemen. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — sigh away Sundays.] A proverbial expression to signify that a man has no rest at all; when Sunday, a day formerly of ease and diversion, was passed so uncomfortably. WARBURTON.

I cannot find this proverbial expression in any ancient book whatever. I am apt to believe that the learned commentator has mistaken the drift of it, and that it most probably alludes to the strict manner in which the sabbath was observed by the Puritans, who usually spent that day in sighs and gruntings, and other hypocritical marks of devotion. STEEVENS.

BENE. I would, your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. PEDRO. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

BENE. You hear, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance:—He is in love. With who?—now that is your grace's part—Mark, how short his answer is:—With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

CLAUD. If this were so, so were it uttered.<sup>2</sup>

BENE. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor 'twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

CLAUD. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. PEDRO. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

CLAUD. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. PEDRO. By my troth, I speak my thought.

CLAUD. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

BENE. And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.] This and the three next speeches I do not well understand; there seems something omitted relating to Hero's consent, or to Claudio's marriage, else I know not what Claudio can wish not to be otherwise. The copies all read alike. Perhaps it may be better thus:

Claud. If this were so, so were it.

Bene. Uttered like the old tale, &c.

Claudio gives a sullen answer, if it is so, so it is. Still there seems something omitted which Claudio and Pedro concur in wishing. JOHNSON.

Claudio, evading at first a confession of his passion, says; if I had really confided such a secret to him, yet he would have blabbed it in this manner. In his next speech, he thinks proper to avow his love; and when Benedick says, God forbid it should be so, i. e. God forbid he should even wish to marry her; Claudio replies, God forbid I should not wish it. STEEVENS.

CLAUD. That I love her, I feel.

D. PEDRO. That she is worthy, I know.

BENE. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. PEDRO. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretick in the despite of beauty.

CLAUD. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will. <sup>4</sup>

BENE. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks: but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, <sup>5</sup> or hang my bugle in an

“ I speake mine.” But the former is right. Benedick means, that he spoke his mind when he said — “ God forbid it should be so;” i. e. that Claudio should be in love, and marry in consequence of his passion. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — but in the force of his will. ] Alluding to the definition of a heretick in the schools. WARBURTON.

<sup>5</sup> — but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, ] That is, I will wear a horn on my forehead which the huntsman may blow. A recheate is the sound by which dogs are called back. Shakspeare had no mercy upon the poor cuckold, his horn is an inexhaustible subject of merriment. JOHNSON.

So, in The Return from Parnassus: “ — When you blow the death of your fox in the field or covert, then you must sound three notes, with three winds; and recheat, mark you, fir, upon the same three winds.”

“ Now, fir, when you come to your stately gate, as you sounded the recheat before, so now you must sound the relief three times.”

Again, in The Book of Huntynge, &c. bl. l. no date: Blow the whole rechate with three wyndes, the first wynde one longe and six shorte. The seconde wynde two shorte and one longe. The thred wynde one longe and two shorte.”

Among Bagford's Collections relative to Typography, in the British Museum, 1044, II. C. is an engraved half sheet, containing the ancient Hunting Notes of England, &c. Among these, I find, invisible baldrick, <sup>6</sup> all women shall pardon me: Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for the which I may go the finer,) I will live a bachelor.

D. PEDRO. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

BENE. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker's pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house, for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. PEDRO. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument. <sup>7</sup>

BENE. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, <sup>8</sup>

Single, Double, and Treble Recheats, Running Recheat, Warbling Recheat, another Recheat with the tongue very hard, another smother Recheat, and another warbling Recheat. The musical notes are affixed to them all. STEEVENS.

A recheate is a particular lesson upon the horn, to call dogs back from the scent: from the old French word recet, which was used in the same sense as retraite. HANMER.

<sup>6</sup> ——— hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick,] Bugle, i. e. bugle-horn, hunting-horn. The meaning seems to be—or that I should be compelled to carry a horn on my forehead where there is nothing visible to support it. So, in John Alday's translation of Pierre Boisteau's Theatrum Mundi, &c. bl. l. no date: "—— Beholde the hazard wherin thou art (sayth William de la Perriere) that thy round head become not forked, which were a fearfull sight if it were visible and apparent."

It is still said of the mercenary cuckold, that he carries his horns in his pockets. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> ——— notable argument.] An eminent subject for satire.

JOHNSON.

<sup>8</sup> ——— in a bottle like a cat,] As to the cat and bottle, I can procure no better information than the following.

In some counties in England, a cat was formerly closed up with a quantity of soot in a wooden bottle, (such as that in which and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and call'd Adam. <sup>6</sup> shepherds carry their liquor,) and was suspended on a line. He who beat out the bottom as he ran under it, and was nimble enough to escape its contents, was regarded as the hero of this inhuman diversion.

Again, in Warres, or the Peace is broken, bl. 1. — “arrowes flew faster than they did at a catte in a basket, when Prince Arthur, or the Duke of Shordich, stracke up the drumme in the field.”

In a Poem, however, called Cornu-copiæ, or Pasquil's Night-cap, or an Antidote to the Head ache, 1623, p. 48, the following passage occurs:

“Fairer than any stake in Greys-inn field, &c.
“Guarded with gunners, bill-men, and a rout
“Of bow-men bold, which at a cat do shoot.”

Again, ibid:

“Nor at the top a cat-a-mount was fram'd,
“Or some wilde beast that ne'er before was tam'd;
“Made at the charges of some archer stout,
“To have his name canoniz'd in the clout.”

The foregoing quotations may serve to throw some light on Benedick's allusion. They prove, however, that it was the custom to shoot at facetious as well as real cats. STEEVENS.

This practice is still kept up at Kelso, in Scotland, where it is called — Cat-in-barrel. See a description of the whole ceremony in a little account of the town of Kelso, published in 1789, by one Ebenezer Lazarus, a silly Methodist, who has interlarded his book with scraps of pious and other poetry. Speaking of this sport, he says:

“The cat in the barrel exhibits such a farce,
“That he who can relish it is worse than an ass.” DOUCE.

9 — and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and call'd Adam.] But why should he therefore be called Adam? Perhaps, by a quotation or two we may be able to trace the poet's allusion here. In Law-Tricks, or, Who would have thought it, (a comedy written by John Day, and printed in 1608,) I find this speech: “Adam Bell, a substantial outlaw, and a passing good archer, yet no tobacconist.” By this it appears, that Adam Bell at that time of day was of reputation for his skill at the bow. I find him again mentioned in a burlesque poem of Sir William D'Avenant's, called The long Vacation in London. THEOBALD.

Adam Bel, Clym of the Cloughe, and Wyllyam of Cloudesse, were, says Dr. Percy, three noted outlaws, whose skill in Archery, rendered them formerly as famous in the North of England, as

D. PEDRO. Well, as time shall try:

In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.<sup>2</sup>

BENE. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull's horns, and set them in my forehead: and let me be vilely painted; and in such great letters as they write, Here is good horse to hire, let them signify under my sign, — Here you may see Benedick the married man.

CLAUD. If this should ever happen, thou would'st be horn-mad.

D. PEDRO. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice,<sup>3</sup> thou wilt quake for this shortly.

BENE. I look for an earthquake too then.

D. PEDRO. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the mean time, good signior Benedick, repair to Leonato's; commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Robin Hood and his fellows were in the midland counties. Their place of residence was in the forest of Englewood, not far from Carlisle. At what time they lived does not appear. The author of the common ballads on The Pedigree, Education, and Marriage of Robin Hood, makes them contemporary with Robin Hood's father, in order to give him the honour of beating them. See Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, Vol. I. p. 143, where the ballad on these outlaws is preserved. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke.] This line is from The Spanish Tragedy, or Hieronymo, &c. and occurs also, with a slight variation, in Watson's Sonnets, 4to. bl. l. printed in 1581. See note on the last edition of Doddsley's Old Plays, Vol. XII. p. 387. STEEVENS.

The Spanish Tragedy was printed and acted before 1593. MALONE.

It may be proved that The Spanish Tragedy had at least been written before 1562. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice,] All modern writers agree in representing Venice in the same light as the ancients did Cyprus. And it is this character of the people that is here alluded to. WARBURTON.

BENE. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you —

CLAUD. To the tuition of God: From my house, (if I had it,) —

D. PEDRO. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.

BENE. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of your discourse is sometimes guarded with fragments,<sup>4</sup> and the guards are but slightly basted on neither: ere you flout old ends any further,<sup>5</sup> examine your conscience; and so I leave you. [Exit BENEDICK.

<sup>4</sup> — guarded with fragments,] Guards were ornamental lace or borders. So, in The Merchant of Venice:

“ — give him a livery

“ More guarded than his fellows.”

Again, in Henry IV. Part I:

“ — velvet guards, and Sunday citizens.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — ere you flout old ends, &c.] Before you endeavour to distinguish yourself any more by antiquated allusions, examine whether you can fairly claim them for your own. This, I think is the meaning: or it may be understood in another sense, examine, if your sarcasms do not touch yourself. JOHNSON.

The ridicule here is to the formal conclusions of Epistles dedicatory and Letters. Barnaby Googe thus ends his dedication to the first edition of Palingenius, 12mo. 1560: “ And thus committynge your Ladiship with all yours to the tuition of the moste mercifull God, I ende. From Staple Inne at London, the eighte and twenty of March.” The practice had however become obsolete in Shakspeare's time. In A poste with a Packet of mad Letters, by Nicholas Breton, 4to. 1607; I find a Letter ending in this manner, entitled, “ A letter to laugh at after the old fashion of love to a Maide.” REED.

Dr. Johnson's latter explanation is, I believe, the true one. By old ends the speaker may mean the conclusion of letters commonly used in Shakspeare's time; “ From my house this sixth of July,” &c. So, in the conclusion of a letter which our author supposes Lucrece to write:

“ So I commend me from our house in grief;

“ My woes are tedious, though my words are brief.”

See The Rape of Lucrece, p. 547: edit. 1780, and the note there.

CLAUD. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. PEDRO. My love is thine to teach; teach it but how.

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn
Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

CLAUD. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. PEDRO. No child but Hero, she's his only heir:
Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

CLAUD. O my lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love:
But now I am return'd, and that war-thoughts
Have left their places vacant, in their rooms
Come thronging soft and delicate desires,
All prompting me how fair young Hero is,
Saying, I lik'd her ere I went to wars.

D. PEDRO. Thou wilt be like a lover presently,
And tire the hearer with a book of words;
If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it;
And I will break with her, and with her father,

Old ends, however, may refer to the quotation that D. Pedro had made from The Spanish Tragedy. "Ere you attack me on the subject of love, with fragments of old plays, examine whether you are yourself free from its power." So, King Richard:

"With odd old ends, stol'n forth of holy writ."

This kind of conclusion to letters was not obsolete in our author's time, as has been suggested. Michael Drayton concludes one of his letters to Drummond of Hawthornden, in 1619, thus: "And so wishing you all happiness, I commend you to God's tuition, and rest your assured friend." So also Lord Salisbury concludes a letter to Sir Ralph Winwood, April 7th, 1610: "— And so I commit you to God's protection."

Winwood's Memorials, III. 147. MALONE.

And thou shalt have her: Was't not to this end,
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story?

CLAUD. How sweetly do you minister to love,
That know love's grief by his complexion!
But lest my liking might too sudden seem,
I would have salv'd it with a longer treatise.

D. PEDRO. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest grant is the necessity: <sup>6</sup>
Look, what will serve, is fit: 'tis once, thou lov'st;<sup>7</sup>
And I will fit thee with the remedy.
I know, we shall have revelling to-night;
I will assume thy part in some disguise,
And tell fair Hero I am Claudio;
And in her bosom I'll unclasp my heart,
And take her hearing prisoner with the force
And strong encounter of my amorous tale:
Then, after, to her father will I break;

<sup>6</sup> The fairest grant is the necessity: ] i. e. no one can have a better reason for granting a request than the necessity of its being granted.
WARBURTON.

Mr. Hayley with great acuteness proposes to read,
The fairest grant is to necessity. STEEVENS.

These words cannot imply the sense that Warburton contends for; but if we suppose that grant means concession, the sense is obvious; and that is no uncommon acceptation of that word.

M. MASON.

<sup>7</sup> — 'tis once, thou lov'st; ] This phrase, with concomitant obscurity, appears in other dramas of our author, viz. The Merry Wives of Windsor, and K. Henry VIII. In The Comedy of Errors, it stands as follows:

“Once this — Your long experience of her wisdom,” &c.
Balthasar is speaking to the Ephesian Antipholis.

Once may therefore mean “once for all,” — “'tis enough to say at once.” STEEVENS.

Once has here, I believe, the force of — once for all. So, in Coriolanus: “Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.” MALONE.

And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine:
In practice let us put it presently. [ Exeunt.

An Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO and ANTONIO.

LEON. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this musick?

ANT. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news <sup>7</sup> that you yet dream'd not of.

LEON. Are they good?

ANT. As the event stamps them; but they have a good cover, they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley <sup>8</sup> in my orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved my niece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

LEON. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?

ANT. A good sharp fellow? I will send for him, and question him yourself.

LEON. No, no; we will hold it as a dream, till it appear itself: — but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an

SCENE III.

Another Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter Don JOHN and CONRADE.

CON. What the goujere, <sup>2</sup> my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. JOHN. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds it, therefore the sadness is without limit.

CON. You should hear reason.

D. JOHN. And when I have heard it, what blessing bringeth it?

CON. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.

D. JOHN. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say'st thou art) born under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: <sup>3</sup> I must be sad when I have <sup>9</sup> Cousins, you know —] — and afterwards, — good cousins.] Cousins were anciently enrolled among the dependants, if not the domesticks, of great families, such as that of Leonato. Petruchio, while intent on the subjection of Katharine, calls out, in terms imperative, for his cousin Ferdinand. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> What the goujere, ] i. e. morbus Gallicus. The old copy corruptly reads, “good-year.” The same expression occurs again in K. Lear, A & V. sc. iii:

“The goujeres shall devour them, flesh and fell.”
See note on this passage. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> I cannot hide what I am:] This is one of our author's natural touches. An envious and unsocial mind, too proud to give cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and tend on no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.<sup>4</sup>

CON. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without controlment. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath ta'en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. JOHN. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace;<sup>5</sup> and it better fits my blood pleasure, and too fullen to receive it, always endeavours to hide its malignity from the world and from itself, under the plainness of simple honesty, or the dignity of haughty independence.

JOHNSON.

<sup>4</sup> — claw no man in his humour.] To claw is to flatter. So the pope's claw-backs, in Bishop Jewel, are the pope's flatterers. The sense is the same in the proverb, Mulus mulum scabit.

JOHNSON.

So, in Albion's England, 1597, p. 125:

“ The overweening of thy wits doth make thy foes to smile, “ Thy friends to weepe, and claw-backs thee with soothing to beguile.”

Again, in Wylson on Usury, 1571, p. 141: “ — therefore I will clawe him, and saye well might he fare, and godds blessing have he too. For the more he speaketh, the better it itcheth, and maketh better for me.” REED.

<sup>5</sup> I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace;] A canker is the canker rose, dog-rose, cynosbatus, or hip. The sense is, I would rather live in obscurity the wild life of nature, than owe dignity or estimation to my brother. He still continues his wish of gloomy independence. But what is the meaning of the expression, a rose in his grace? If he was a rose of himself, his brother's grace or favour could not degrade him. I once read thus: I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his garden: that is, I had rather be what nature makes me, however mean, than owe any exaltation or improvement to my brother's kindness or cultivation. But a less change will be sufficient: I think it to be disdain'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog; therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage: If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the mean time, let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

CON. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. JOHN. I make all use of it, for I use it only.<sup>6</sup>
Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter BORACHIO.

BORA. I came yonder from a great supper; the prince, your brother, is royally entertain'd by should be read, I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose by his grace. JOHNSON.

The canker is a term often substituted for the canker-rose. Heywood, in his Love's Mistress, 1636, calls it the "canker-flower." Again, in Shakspeare's 54th Sonnet:

"The canker blooms have full as deep a die

"As the perfumed tincture of the rose."

I think no change is necessary. The sense is, — I had rather be a neglected dog-rose in a hedge, than a garden-flower of the same species, if it profited by his culture. STEEVENS.

The latter words are intended as an answer to what Conrade has just said — "he hath ta'en you newly into his grace, where it is impossible you should take true root," &c. In Macbeth we have a kindred expression:

"—— Welcome hither:

"I have begun to plant thee, and will labour

"To make thee full of growing."

Again, in K. Henry VI. P. III.

"I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares."

MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> ——— for I use it only.] i. e. for I make nothing else my counsellor. STEEVENS.

Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. JOHN. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

BORA. Marry, it is your brother's right hand.

D. JOHN. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

BORA. Even he.

D. JOHN. A proper squire! And who, and who? which way looks he?

BORA. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. JOHN. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

BORA. Being entertain'd for a perfumer, as I was smoking a musty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference:<sup>7</sup> I whipt me behind the arras; and there heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

D. JOHN. Come, come, let us thither; this may prove food to my displeasure: that young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow; if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way: You are both sure,<sup>8</sup> and will assist me?

CON. To the death, my lord.

D. JOHN. Let us to the great supper; their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued: 'Would the cook

BORA. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.]

ACT II. SCENE I.

A Hall in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, HERO, BEATRICE, and Others.

LEON. Was not count John here at supper?

ANT. I saw him not.

BEAT. How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him, but I am heart-burn'd an hour after.<sup>9</sup>

HERO. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

BEAT. He were an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other, too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling.

LEON. Then half signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face, —

BEAT. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, — if he could get her good will.

LEON. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

ANT. In faith, she is too curst.

<sup>9</sup> — heart-burn'd an hour after. ] The pain commonly called the heart-burn, proceeds from an acid humour in the stomach, and is therefore properly enough imputed to tart looks. JOHNSON.

BEAT. Too curst is more than curst: I shall lehen God's sending that way: for it is said, God sends a curst cow short horns; but to a cow too curst he sends none.

LEON. So, by being too curst, God will send you no horns.

BEAT. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face; I had rather lie in the wollen.<sup>2</sup>

LEON. You may light upon a husband, that hath no beard.

BEAT. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting-gentlewoman? He that hath a beard, is more than a youth? and he that hath no beard, is less than a man: and he that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: Therefore I will even take six-pence in earnest of the bear-herd, and lead his apes into hell.

LEO. Well then, go you into hell!<sup>3</sup>

BEAT. No; but to the gate: and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maids: so

<sup>3</sup> Well then, &c. ] Of the two next speeches Dr. Warburton says, All this impious nonsense thrown to the bottom, is the players', and foisted in without rhyme or reason. He therefore puts them in the margin. They do not deserve indeed so honourable a place; yet I am afraid they are too much in the manner of our author, who is sometimes trying to purchase merriment at too dear a rate.

JOHNSON.

I have restored the lines omitted. STEEVENS.

deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

ANT. Well, niece, [To HERO] I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

BEAT. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, Father, as it please you:—but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, Father, as it please me.

LEON. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

BEAT. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-master'd with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clod of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

LEON. Daughter, remember, what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

BEAT. The fault will be in the musick, cousin, if you be not woo'd in good time: if the prince be too important,<sup>4</sup> tell him, there is measure in every thing,<sup>5</sup> and so dance out the answer. For hear me, Hero;

<sup>4</sup> ——— if the prince be too important, ] Important here, and in many other places, is importunate. JOHNSON.

So, in King Lear, A& IV. sc. iv:

“ ——— great France

“ My mourning, and important tears hath pitied.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> ——— there is measure in every thing, ] A measure in old language, beside its ordinary meaning, signified also a dance. MALONE.

So, in King Richard II:

“ My legs can keep no measure in delight,

“ When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief.” STEEVENS.

Wooring, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly-modest, as a measure full of state and ancientry; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

LEON. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

BEAT. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by day-light.

LEON. The revellers are entering; brother, make good room.

D. PEDRO. Lady, will you walk about with your friend? <sup>7</sup>

HERO. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

<sup>6</sup> — Balthazar; ] The quarto and folio add — or dumb John.

STEEVENS.

Here is another proof that when the first copies of our author's plays were prepared for the press, the transcript was made out by the ear. If the MS. had lain before the transcriber, it is very unlikely that he should have mistaken Don for dumb: but, by an inarticulate speaker, or inattentive hearer, they might easily be confounded. MALONE.

Don John's taciturnity has been already noticed. It seems therefore not improbable that the author himself might have occasionally applied the epithet dumb to him. REED.

<sup>7</sup> — your friend? ] Friend, in our author's time, was the common term for a lover. So also in French and Italian. MALONE.

Mr. Malone might have added, that this term was equally applicable to both sexes; for, in Measure for Measure, Lucio tells Isabella that her brother had "got his friend with child." STEEVENS.

D. PEDRO. With me in your company?

HERO. I may say so, when I please.

D. PEDRO. And when please you to say so?

HERO. When I like your favour; for God defend, the lute should be like the case! <sup>8</sup>

D. PEDRO. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove. <sup>9</sup>

HERO. Why, then your visor should be thatch'd.

D. PEDRO. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Takes her aside.

BENE. Well, I would you did like me.

MARG. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

<sup>8</sup> — the lute should be like the case!] i. e. that your face should be as homely and coarse as your mask. THEOBALD.

<sup>9</sup> My visor is Philemon's roof, within the house is Jove.] The first folio has — Love; the quarto, 1600 — Iove; so that here Mr. Theobald might have found the very reading which, in the following note, he represents as a conjecture of his own. STEEVENS.

'Tis plain, the poet alludes to the story of Baucis and Philemon from Ovid: and this old couple, as the Roman poet describes it, lived in a thatch'd cottage:

“ — stipulis & canna tecta palustri.”

But why, within this house is love? Though this old pair lived in a cottage, this cottage received two straggling Gods, (Jupiter and Mercury) under its roof. So, Don Pedro is a prince; and though his visor is but ordinary, he would insinuate to Hero, that he has something godlike within: alluding either to his dignity or the qualities of his mind and person. By these circumstances, I am sure, the thought is mended: as, I think verily, the text is too, by the addition of a single letter — within the house is Jove. Nor is this emendation a little confirmed by another passage in our author, in which he plainly alludes to the same story. As you like it:

“Jaques. O, knowledge ill inhabited, worse than Jove in a thatched house!” THEOBALD.

The line of Ovid above quoted is thus translated by Golding, 1587:

“The rooffe thereof was thatched all with straw and fennish reede.” MALONE.

BENE. Which is one?

MARG. I say my prayers aloud.

BENE. I love you the better; the hearers may cry amen.

MARG. God match me with a good dancer!

BALTH. Amen.

MARG. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done! — Answer, clerk.

BALTH. No more words; the clerk is answer'd.

URS. I know you well enough; you are signior Antonio.

ANT. At a word, I am not.

URS. I know you by the waggling of your head.

ANT. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

URS. You could never do him so ill-well,<sup>2</sup> unless you were the very man: Here's his dry hand<sup>3</sup> up and down; you are he, you are he.

ANT. At a word, I am not.

URS. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

BEAT. Will you not tell me who told you so?

BENE. No, you shall pardon me.

BEAT. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

BENE. Not now.

<sup>2</sup> You could never do him so ill-well, ] A similar phrase occurs in The Merchant of Venice:

“He hath a better bad habit of frowning, than the Count Palatine.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — his dry hand — ] A dry hand was anciently regarded as the sign of a cold constitution. To this, Maria, in Twelfth-Night, alludes, A& I. sc. iii. STEEVENS.

BEAT. That I was disdainful,—and that I had my good wit out of the Hundred merry Tales; <sup>4</sup>—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

BENE. What's he?

BEAT. I am sure, you know him well enough.

<sup>4</sup> Hundred merry Tales; ] The book, to which Shakspeare alludes, might be an old translation of Les Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles. The original was published at Paris, in the black letter, before the year 1500, and is said to have been written by some of the royal family of France. Ames mentions a translation of it prior to the time of Shakspeare.

In The London Chaunticlere, 1659, this work, among others, is cried for sale by a ballad-man. “The Seven Wise Men of Gotham; a Hundred merry Tales; Scoggin's Jests,” &c.

Again, in The Nice Valour, &c. by Beaumont and Fletcher:

“—— the Almanacs,

“The Hundred Novels, and the Books of Cookery.”

Of this collection there are frequent entries in the register of the Stationers' Company. The first I met with was in Jan. 1581.

STEEVENS.

This book was certainly printed before the year 1575, and in much repute, as appears from the mention of it in Laneham's Letter concerning the entertainment at Kenelworth-Castle. Again, in The English Courtier and the Cuntrey Gentleman, bl. l. 1586. fig. H. 4: “—— wee want not also pleasant mad headed knaves that bee properly learned and well reade in diverse pleasant bookes and good authors. As Sir Guy of Warwicke, the Foure Sonnes of Aymon, the Ship of Fooles, the Budget of Demaundes, the Hundredth merry Tales, the Booke of Ryddles, and many other excellent writers both witty and pleasaunt.” It has been suggested to me that there is no other reason than the word hundred to suppose this book a translation of the Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles. I have now but little doubt that Boccace's Decameron was the book here alluded to. It contains just one hundred Novels. So, in Guazzo's Civile Conversation, 1586, p. 158: “—— we do but give them occasion to turne over the Hundred Nouvelles of Boccace, and to write amorous and lascivious letters.” REED.

The Hundred merry Tales can never have been a translation of Les Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles, many of which are very tragical relations, and none of them calculated to furnish a lady with good wit. It should seem rather to have been a sort of jest-book. RITSON.

BENE. Not I, believe me.

BEAT. Did he never make you laugh?

BENE. I pray you, what is he?

BEAT. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible flanders:<sup>5</sup> none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy;<sup>6</sup> for he both pleaseth men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him: I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me.

BENE. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

BEAT. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not mark'd, or not laugh'd at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge' wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Musick within.] We must follow the leaders.

BENE. In every good thing.

BEAT. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning. [Dance. Then exeunt all but Don JOHN, BORACHIO, and CLAUDIO.]

<sup>5</sup> — his gift is in devising impossible flanders:] We should read impassible, i. e. flanders so ill invented, that they will pass upon no body. WARBURTON.

Impossible flanders are, I suppose, such flanders as, from their absurdity and impossibility, bring their own confutation with them. JOHNSON.

Johnson's explanation appears to be right. Ford says, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, that he shall search for Falstaff in "impossible places." The word impossible is also used in a similar sense in Jonson's Sejanus, where Silius accuses Afer of "Malicious and manifold applying,

"Foul wrestling, and impossible construction." M. MASON.

<sup>6</sup> — his villainy;] By which she means his malice and impiety. By his impious jests, she insinuates, he pleased libertines; and by his devising flanders of them, he angered them. WARBURTON.

D. JOHN. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it: The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

BORA. And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing.<sup>7</sup>

D. JOHN. Are not you signior Benedick?

CLAUD. You know me well; I am he.

D. JOHN. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero; I pray you, dissuade him from her, she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

CLAUD. How know you he loves her?

D. JOHN. I heard him swear his affection.

BORA. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

D. JOHN. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exeunt Don JOHN and BORACHIO.]

CLAUD. Thus answer I in name of Benedick,
But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.—
'Tis certain so; — the prince wooes for himself.
Friendship is constant in all other things,
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore,<sup>8</sup> all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And trust no agent: for beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>7</sup> — his bearing.] i. e. his carriage, his demeanour. So, in Measure for Measure:

“How I may formally in person bear me.” STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> Therefore, &c.] Let, which is found in the next line, is understood here. MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> — beauty is a witch,

This is an accident of hourly proof,
Which I mistrusted not: Farewell therefore, Hero!

Re-enter BENEDICK.

BENE. Count Claudio?

CLAUD. Yea, the same.

BENE. Come, will you go with me?

CLAUD. Whither?

BENE. Even to the next willow, about your own business, count. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain?<sup>2</sup> or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf?

when opposed to the fire kindled by a witch, no longer preserves the figure of the person whom it was designed to represent, but flows into a shapeless lump; so fidelity, when confronted with beauty, dissolves into our ruling passion, and is lost there like a drop of water in the sea.

That blood signifies (as Mr. Malone has also observed) amorous heat, will appear from the following passage in All's well that ends well, A& III. sc. vii:

"Now his important blood will nought deny

"That she'll demand." STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> ——— usurer's chain?) Chains of gold, of considerable value, were in our author's time, usually worn by wealthy citizens, and others, in the same manner as they now are, on publick occasions, by the Aldermen of London. See The Puritan, or the Widow of Watling-Street, A& III. sc. iii. Albumazar, A& I. sc. vii. and other pieces. REED.

Usury seems about this time to have been a common topic of invective. I have three or four dialogues, pasquils, and discourses on the subject, printed before the year 1600. From every one of these it appears, that the merchants were the chief usurers of the age. STEEVENS.

So, in The Choice of Change, containing the triplicities of Divinitie, Philosophie, and Poetrie, by S. R. Gent. 4to. 1598. "Three sortes of people, in respect of use in necessitie, may be accounted good: — Merchant, for they may play the usurers, instead of the Jewes." Again, ibid: "There is a scarcitie of Jewes, because Christians make an occupation of usurie." MALONE.

You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

CLAUD. I wish him joy of her.

BENE. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

CLAUD. I pray you, leave me.

BENE. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

CLAUD. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit.]

BENE. Alas, poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into fedges. — But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool! — Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry. — Yea; but so; I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, the bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person,<sup>3</sup> and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don PEDRO, HERO, and LEONATO.

D. PEDRO. Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him?

BENE. Troth, my lord, I have play'd the part of lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a <sup>3</sup> — it is the base, the bitter disposition of Beatrice that puts the world into her person,] That is, It is the disposition of Beatrice, who takes upon her to personate the world, and therefore represents the world as saying what she only says herself.

The old copies read — base, though bitter: but I do not understand how base and bitter are inconsistent, or why what is bitter should not be base. I believe, we may safely read, — It is the base, the bitter disposition. JOHNSON.

I have adopted Dr. Johnson's emendation, though I once thought it unnecessary. STEEVENS.

lodge in a warren; <sup>4</sup> I told him, and, I think, I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; <sup>5</sup> and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. PEDRO. To be whipped! What's his fault?

BENE. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. PEDRO. Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

BENE. Yet it had not been amiss, the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself; and the rod he might have bestow'd on you, who, as I take it, have stol'n his bird's nest.

D. PEDRO. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

BENE. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

<sup>4</sup> — as melancholy as a lodge in a warren;] A parallel thought occurs in the first chapter of Isaiah, where the prophet, describing the desolation of Judah, says: "The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers," &c. I am informed, that near Aleppo, these lonely buildings are still made use of, it being necessary, that the fields where water-melons, cucumbers, &c. are raised, should be regularly watched. I learn from Tho. Newton's Herball to the Bible, 8vo. 1587. that "so soone as the cucumbers, &c. be gathered, these lodges are abandoned of the watchmen and keepers, and no more frequented." From these forsaken buildings, it should seem, the prophet takes his comparison. STEEVENS.

I have regulated the entries accordingly. MALONE.

D. PEDRO. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you; the gentleman, that danced with her, told her, she is much wrong'd by you.

BENE. O, she misused me past the endurance of a block; an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answer'd her; my very visor began to assume life, and scold with her: She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester; that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest, with such impossible conveyance, <sup>6</sup> upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole <sup>6</sup> ——— such impossible conveyance,] Dr. Warburton reads impassable: Sir Tho. Hanmer impetuous, and Dr. Johnson importable, which, says he, is used by Spenser, in a sense very congruous to this passage, for insupportable, or not to be sustained. Also by the last translators of the Apocrypha; and therefore such a word as Shakspeare may be supposed to have written. REED.

Importable is very often used by Lidgate in his Prologue to the translation of The Tragedies gathered by Ihon Bochas, &c. as well as by Holinshed.

Impossible may be licentiously used for unaccountable. Beatrice has already said, that Benedick invents impossible slanders.

So, in The Fair Maid of the Inn, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"You would look for some most impossible antick."

Again, in The Roman Actor, by Massinger:

"—— to lose

"Ourselves, by building on impossible hopes." STEEVENS.

Impossible may have been what Shakspeare wrote, and be used in the sense of incredible or inconceivable, both here and in the beginning of the scene, where Beatrice speaks of impossible slanders. M. MASON.

I believe the meaning is — with a rapidity equal to that of jugglers, who appear to perform impossibilities. We have the same epithet again in Twelfth-Night: "There is no Christian can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness." So Ford says in The Merry Wives of Windsor, — "I will examine impossible places." Again, in Julius Cæsar:

"—— Now bid me run,

"And I will strive with things impossible,

"And get the better of them."

Conveyance was the common term in our author's time for sleight of hand. MALONE.

D. PEDRO. Look, here she comes.

D. PEDRO. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

BEAT. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me a while; and I gave him use for it,<sup>3</sup> a double heart for his single one: marry, once before, he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say, I have lost it.

D. PEDRO. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.

So, Cartwright, in his comedy called The Siege, or Love's Convert, 1651:

" — bid me take the Parthian king by the beard: or draw an eye-tooth from the jaw royal of the Persian monarch."

Such an achievement, however, Huon of Bourdeaux was sent to perform, and performed it. See chap. 46. edit. 1601. "he opened his mouth, and tooke out his foure great teeth, and then cut off his beard, and tooke thereof as much as pleased him." STEEVENS.

"Thou must goe to the citie of Babylon to the Admiral Gaudisse, to bring me thy hand full of the heare of his beard, and foure of his greatest teeth. D. PEDRO. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

CLAUD. Not sad, my lord.

D. PEDRO. How then? Sick?

CLAUD. Neither, my lord.

BEAT. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well: but civil, count; civil as an orange,<sup>4</sup> and something of that jealous complexion.<sup>5</sup>

D. PEDRO. I'faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have wooed in thy name, and fair Hero is won; I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained: name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

LEON. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

BEAT. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

CLAUD. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much. — Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and dote upon the exchange.

BEAT. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak, neither.

D. PEDRO. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

BEAT. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool,<sup>3</sup> it keeps on the windy side of care: — My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.

<sup>4</sup> — civil as an orange,] This conceit occurs likewise in Nashe's four Letters confuted, 1592. "For the order of my life, it is as civil as an orange." STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — poor fool,] This was formerly an expression of tenderness. See King Lear, last scene: "And my poor fool is hang'd." MALONE, CLAUD. And so she doth, cousin.

BEAT. Good lord, for alliance!<sup>6</sup> — Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burn'd;<sup>7</sup> I may sit in a corner, and cry, heigh ho! for a husband.

D. PEDRO. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

BEAT. I would rather have one of your father's getting: Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. PEDRO. Will you have me, lady?

BEAT. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your grace is too costly to wear every day: — But, I beseech your grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth, and no matter.

D. PEDRO. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

<sup>6</sup> Good lord, for alliance!] Claudio has just called Beatrice cousin. I suppose, therefore, the meaning is, — Good Lord, here have I got a new kinsman by marriage. MALONE.

I cannot understand these words, unless they imply a wish for the speaker's alliance with a husband. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burn'd;] What is it, to go to the world? perhaps, to enter by marriage into a settled state; but why is the unmarried lady sun-burnt? I believe we should read, — Thus goes every one to the wood but I, and I am sun-burnt. Thus does every one but I find a shelter, and I am left exposed to wind and sun. The nearest way to the wood, is a phrase for the readiest means to any end. It is said of a woman, who accepts a worse match than those which she had refused, that she has passed through the wood, and at last taken a crooked stick. But conjectural criticism has always something to abate its confidence. Shakspeare, in All's well that Ends well, uses the phrase, to go to the world, for marriage. So that my emendation depends only on the opposition of wood to sun-burnt. JOHNSON.

I am sun-burnt may mean, I have lost my beauty, and am consequently no longer such an object as can tempt a man to marry.

STEEVENS.

BEAT. No, sure, my lord, my mother cry'd; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born. — Cousins, God give you joy!

LEON. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

BEAT. I cry you mercy, uncle.—By your grace's pardon. [Exit BEATRICE.]

D. PEDRO. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

LEON. There's little of the melancholy element in her,<sup>8</sup> my lord: she is never sad, but when she sleeps; and not ever sad then; for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dream'd of unhappiness,<sup>9</sup> and waked herself with laughing.

D. PEDRO. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

LEON. O, by no means; she mocks all her wooers out of suit.

D. PEDRO. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

LEON. O Lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. PEDRO. Count Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

<sup>8</sup> There's little of the melancholy element in her,] “Does not our life consist of the four elements?” says Sir Toby, in Twelfth Night. So, also in King Henry V: “He is pure air and fire, and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him.”

MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> — she hath often dream'd of unhappiness,] So all the editions; but M. Theobald alters it to, an happiness, having no conception that unhappiness meant any thing but misfortune, and that, he thinks, she could not laugh at. He had never heard that it signified a wild, wanton unlucky trick. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher, in their comedy of The Maid of the Mill:

“ — My dreams are like my thoughts, honest and innocent:
“ Yours are unhappy.” WARBURTON.

CLAUD. To-morrow, my lord; Time goes on crutches, till love have all his rites.

LEON. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just sevennight; and a time too brief too, to have all things answer my mind.

D. PEDRO. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us; I will, in the interim, undertake one of Hercules' labours; which is, to bring signior Benedick, and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other.<sup>2</sup> I would fain have it a match; and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

<sup>2</sup> — into a mountain of affection, the one with the other.] A mountain of affection with one another is a strange expression, yet I know not well how to change it. Perhaps it was originally written to bring Benedick and Beatrice into a mootings of affection; to bring them not to any more mootings of contention, but to a mootings or conversation of love. This reading is confirmed by the preposition with; a mountain with each other, or affection with each other, cannot be used, but a mootings with each other is proper and regular.

JOHNSON.

Uncommon as the word proposed by Dr. Johnson may appear, it is used in several of the old plays. So, in Glaphorne's Wit in a Constable, 1639.

" — one who never

" Had mooted in the hall, or seen the revels

" Kept in the house at Christmas."

Again, in The Return from Parnassus, 1606.

" It is a plain case, whereon I mooted in our temple."

Again:

" — at a mootings in our temple." Ibid.

And yet, all that I believe is meant by a mountain of affection is, a great deal of affection.

In one of Stanyhurst's poems is the following phrase to denote a large quantity of love.

" Lumps of love promise, nothing perform'd," &c.

Again, in The Renegado, by Massinger:

" — 'tis but parting with

" A mountain of vexation."

LEON. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.

CLAUD. And I, my lord.

D. PEDRO. And you too, gentle Hero?

HERO. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. PEDRO. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain,<sup>2</sup> of approved valour, and confirm'd honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick: — and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach,<sup>3</sup> he shall fall in love with Thus, also in K. Henry VIII: we find “a sea of glory.” In Hamlet: “a sea of troubles.” Again, in Howel's History of Venice: “though they see mountains of miseries heaped on one's back.” Again, in Bacon's History of K. Henry VII: “Perkin sought to corrupt the servants to the lieutenant of the tower by mountains of promises.” Again, in The Comedy of Errors: “— the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me.” Little can be inferred from the present offence against grammar; an offence which may not strictly be imputable to Shakspeare, but rather to the negligence or ignorance of his transcribers or printers. STEEVENS.

Shakspeare has many phrases equally harsh. He who would hazard such expressions as a storm of fortune, a vale of years, and a tempest of provocation, would not scruple to write a mountain of affection.”

MALONE.

Another Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter Don JOHN and BORACHIO.

D. JOHN. It is so; the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

BORA. Yea, my lord; but I can cross it.

D. JOHN. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicinable to me: I am sick in displeasure to him; and whatsoever comes athwart his affection, ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage.

BORA. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

D. JOHN. Show me briefly how.

BORA. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

D. JOHN. I remember.

BORA. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber-window.

D. JOHN. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

BORA. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him, that he hath wrong'd his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated state, such a one as Hero.

D. JOHN. What proof shall I make of that?

BORA. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato: Look you for any other issue?

D. JOHN. Only to despise them, I will endeavour any thing.

<sup>4</sup> Bora. Go then, find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone: tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; — offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood, than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret, Hero; hear Margaret term me Claudio; and bring them to see this, the very night before the intended wedding:] Thus the whole stream of the editions from the first quarto downwards. I am obliged here to give a short account of the plot depending, that the emendation I have made may appear the more clear and unquestionable. The business stands thus: Claudio, a favourite of the Arragon prince, is, by his intercessions with her father, to be married to fair Hero; Don John, natural brother of the prince, and a hater of Claudio, is in his spleen zealous to disappoint the match. Borachio, a rascally dependant on Don John, offers his assistance, and engages to break off the marriage by this stratagem. “Tell the prince and Claudio (says he) that Hero is in love with me; they won’t believe it: offer them proofs, as, that they shall see me converse with her in her chamber-window. I am in the good graces of her waiting-woman, Margaret; and I’ll prevail with Margaret, at a dead hour of night, to personate her mistress Hero; do you then bring the prince and Claudio to overhear our discourse; and they shall have the torment to hear me address Margaret by the name of Hero, and her say sweet things to me by the name of Claudio.” — This is the substance of Borachio’s device to make Hero suspected of disloyalty, and to break off her match with Claudio. But, in the name of common sense, could it displease Claudio, to hear his mistress making use of his name tenderly? If he saw another man with her, and heard her call him Claudio, he might reasonably think her betrayed, but not have the same reason to accuse her of disloyalty. Besides, how could her naming Claudio, make the prince and Claudio believe that she loved Borachio, as he desires Don John to insinuate to them that she did? The

Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone: tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal ' both to the prince and Claudio, as—in love of your brother's honour who hath made this match; and his friend's reputation, who is thus like to be cozen'd with the semblance of a maid, — that you have discover'd thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood, than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret, Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this, the very night before the intended wedding: for, in the mean time, I will so fashion the circumstances weighed, there is no doubt but the passage ought to be reformed, as I have settled in the text — hear me call Margaret, Hero; hear Margaret term me, Borachio. THEOBALD.

Though I have followed Mr. Theobald's direction, I am not convinced that this change of names is absolutely necessary. Claudio would naturally resent the circumstance of hearing another called by his own name; because, in that case, baseness of treachery would appear to be aggravated by wantonness of insult; and, at the same time he would imagine the person so distinguished to be Borachio, because Don John was previously to have informed both him and Don Pedro, that Borachio was the favoured lover.

STEEVENS.

We should surely read Borachio instead of Claudio. — There could be no reason why Margaret should call him Claudio; and that would ill agree with what Borachio says in the last Act, where he declares that Margaret knew not what she did when she spoke to him. M. MASON.

Claudio would naturally be enraged to find his mistress, Hero, (for such he would imagine Margaret to be,) address Borachio, or any other man, by his name, as he might suppose that she called him by the name of Claudio in consequence of a secret agreement between them, as a cover, in case she were overheard; and he would know, without a possibility of error, that it was not Claudio, with whom in fact she conversed. matter, that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be call'd assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

D. JOHN. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice: Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

BORA. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

D. JOHN. I will presently go learn their day of marriage. [Excunt.]

BENE. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it hither to me in the orchard. <sup>6</sup>

BOY. I am here already, sir.

BENE. I know that; — but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.] — I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laugh'd at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn, by falling in love: And such a man is Claudio. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes? I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be sworn, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I'll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair; yet I am well: another

7 ——— carving the fashion of a new doublet.] This folly, so conspicuous in the gallants of former ages, is laughed at by all our comic writers. So, in Greene's Farewell to Folly, 1617: "— We are almost as fantastic as the English gentleman that is painted naked, with a pair of sheers in his hand, as not being resolved after what fashion to have his coat cut." STEEVENS.

The English gentleman in the above extract alludes to a plate in Borde's Introduction of Knowledge. In Barnaby Riche's Faults and nothing but Faults, 4to. 1606, p. 6, we have the following account of a Fashionmonger: ——— here comes first the Fashionmonger, that spends his time in the contemplation of futes. Alas! good gentleman, there is something amiss with him. I perceive it by his sad and heavie countenance: for my life his tailer and he are at some square about the making of his new sute; he hath cut it after the old stampe of some stale fashion that is at the least of a whole fortnight's standing." REED.

The English gentleman is represented [by Borde] naked, with a pair of tailor's sheers in one hand, and a piece of cloth on his arm, with the following verses:

"I am an Englishman, and naked I stand here,
"Musing in my mynde what rayment I shall were,
"For now I will ware this, and now I will were that,
"Now I will were I cannot tell what," &c.

is wife; yet I am well; another virtuous; yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that's certain; wife, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God.<sup>9</sup> Ha! the prince and monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [ Withdraws.

<sup>9</sup> ——— and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. ] Perhaps Benedick alludes to a fashion, very common in the time of Shakspeare, that of dying the hair.

Stubbes, in his Anatomy of Abuses, 1595, speaking of the attires of women's heads, says: "If any have haire of her owne naturall growing, which is not faire ynough, then will they die it in divers colours." STEEVENS.

The practice of dying the hair was one of those fashions so frequent before and in Queen Elizabeth's time, as to be thoughtworthy of particular animadversion from the pulpit. In the Homily against excess of apparel, b. l. 1547, after mentioning the common excuses of some nice and vain women for painting their faces, dying their hair, &c. the preacher breaks out into the following invective: "Who can paynt her face, and curle her heere, and chaunge it into an unnaturall coloure, but therein doth worke reprove to her maker who made her? as though she coulde make herselfe more comelye than God hath appoynted the measure of her beautie. What do these women but go about to refourme that which God hath made? not knowyng that all thynges naturall is the worke of God: and thynges disguyfed and unnaturall be the workes of the devyll," &c. REED.

Or he may allude to the fashion of wearing false hair, "of whatever colour it pleased God." So, in a subsequent scene: "I like the new tire within, if the hair were a thought browner." Fines Moryson, describing the dress of the ladies of Shakspeare's time, says, "Gentlewomen virgins weare gownes close to the body, and aprons of fine linnen, and go bareheaded, with their hair curiously knotted, and raised at the forehead, but many (against the cold, as they say, weare caps of hair that is not their own." See The Two Gentlemen of Verona. MALONE.

The practice of colouring the hair in Shakspeare's time, receives considerable illustration from Maria Magdalene her Life and Repentance, 1567, where Infidelitie (the Vice) recommends her to a goldsmith to dye her hair yellow with some preparation, when it should fade; and Carnal Concupiscence tells her likewise that there was "other geare besides goldsmith's water," for the purpose.

DOUCE.

Claudio. O, very well, my lord: the musick ended,

We'll fit the kid-fox with a penny-worth. ] i. e. we will be even with the fox now discovered. So the word kid, or kidde, signifies in Chaucer:

"The soothfastness that now is hid,

"Without coverture shall be kid."

"When I undoen have this dreming."

Romaunt of the Rose, 2171, &c.

"Perceiv'd or shew'd.

"He kidde anon his bone was not broken."

Troilus and Cresseide, lib. i. 208.

"With that anon sterte out daungere,

"Out of the place where he was hidde;

"His malice in his cheere was kidde."

Romaunt of the Rose, 2130. GREY.

It is not impossible but that Shakspeare chose on this occasion to employ an antiquated word; and yet if any future editor should choose to read — hid fox, he may observe that Hamlet has said — "Hide fox and all after." STEEVENS.

Dr. Warburton reads as Mr. Steevens proposes. MALONE.

A kid-fox seems to be no more than a young fox or cub. In As you Like it, we have the expression of — "two dog-apes."

RITSON.

Enter BALTHAZAR, with musick. <sup>9</sup>

D. PEDRO. Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again. <sup>2</sup>

BALTH. O good my lord, tax not so bad a voice To slander musick any more than once.

D. PEDRO. It is the witness still of excellency, To put a strange face on his own perfection: — I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

BALTH. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing: Since many a wooer doth commence his suit To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos; Yet will he swear, he loves.

D. PEDRO. Nay, pray thee, come: Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

BALTH. Note this before my notes, There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. PEDRO. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks;

Note, notes, forsooth, and noting! <sup>3</sup> [Musick.

BENE. Now, Divine air! now is his soul ravish'd! — Is it not strange, that sheeps' guts should hale souls out of men's bodies! — Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

<sup>9</sup> — with musick.] I am not sure that this stage-direction (taken from the quarto, 1600) is proper. Balthazar might have been designed at once for a vocal and an instrumental performer. Shakspeare's orchestra was hardly numerous; and the first folio, instead of Balthazar, only gives us Jacke Wilson, the name of the actor who represented him. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.] Balthazar, the musician and servant to Don Pedro, was perhaps thus named from the celebrated Baltazarini, called De Beaujoyeux, an Italian performer on the violin, who was in the highest fame and favour at the court of Henry II. of France, 1577. BURNEY.

— and noting!] The old copies — nothing. The correction was made by Mr. Theobald. MALONE.

BALTHAZAR sings.

I.

BALTH. *Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,<sup>4</sup>
Men were deceivers ever;
One foot in sea, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never:
Then sigh not so,
But let them go,
And be you blith and bonny;
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into, Hey nonny, nonny.*

II.

*Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was leavy.
Then sigh not so, &c.*

D. PEDRO. By my troth, a good song.

BALTH. And an ill finger, my lord.

D. PEDRO. Ha? no; no, faith; thou sing'st well enough for a shift.

BENE. [Aside.] An he had been a dog, that should have howl'd thus, they would have hang'd him: and, I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven,<sup>5</sup> come what plague could have come after it.

<sup>4</sup> Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,]

“ Weep no more, woful shepherds, weep no more.”

Milton's Lycidas. STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven,] i. e. the owl; νυκτιγόραξ. So, in King Henry VI. P. III. sc. vi:

“ The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time.” STEEVENS.

Thus also, Milton, in L'Allegro:

“ And the night-raven sings.” DOUCE.

D. PEDRO. Yea, marry; [To CLAUDIO.]—Dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent musick; for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber-window.

BALTH. The best I can, my lord.

D. PEDRO. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt BALTHAZAR and musick.] Come hither, Leonato: What was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

CLAUD. O, ay:—Stalk on, stalk on; the fowl fits.<sup>6</sup> [Aside to PEDRO.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

LEON. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seem'd ever to abhor.

6 ——— [Stalk on, stalk on; the fowl fits.] This is an allusion to the stalking-horse; a horse either real or fictitious, by which the fowler anciently sheltered himself from the sight of the game.

So, in The Honest Lawyer, 1616:

“Lye there, thou happy warranted case
“Of any villain. Thou hast been my stalking-horse
“Now these ten months.”

Again, in the 25th Song of Drayton's Polyolbion:

“One underneath his horse to get a shoot doth stalk.”

Again, in his Muses' Elysium:

“Then underneath my horse, I stalk my game to strike.”

STEEVENS.

Again, in New Shreds of the Old Snare, by John Gee, quarto, p. 23:

“—— Methinks I behold the cunning fowler, such as I have knowne in the fenne countries and els-where, that doe shoot at woodcockes, snipes, and wilde fowle, by sneaking behind a painted cloth which they carrey before them, having pictured in it the shape of a horse; which while the filly fowle gazeth on, it is knockt downe with hale shot, and so put in the fowler's budget.” REED.

A stalking-bull, with a cloth thrown over him, was sometimes used for deceiving the game; as may be seen from a very elegant cut in Loniceri Venatus & Aucupium. Francofurti, 1582, 4to. and from a print by F. Valeggio, with the motto — “Veste boves operit, dum sturnos fallit edaces.” DOUCE.

BENE. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

[Aside.

LEON. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it; but that she loves him with an enraged affection, — it is past the infinite of thought. <sup>7</sup>

D. PEDRO. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

CLAUD. 'Faith, like enough.

LEON. O God! counterfeit! There never was <sup>7</sup> — but that she loves him with an enraged affection — it is past the infinite of thought.] It is impossible to make sense and grammar of this speech. And the reason is, that the two beginnings of two different sentences are jumbled together and made one. For — but that she loves him with an enraged affection, is only part of a sentence, which should conclude thus. — is most certain. But a new idea striking the speaker, he leaves his sentence unfinished, and turns to another, — It is past the infinite of thought, — which is likewise left unfinished; for it should conclude thus — to say how great that affection is. Those broken disjointed sentences are usual in conversation. However, there is one word wrong, which yet perplexes the sense; and that is infinite. Human thought cannot surely be called infinite with any kind of figurative propriety. I suppose the true reading was definite. This makes the passage intelligible. It is past the definite of thought, — i. e. it cannot be defined or conceived how great that affection is. Shakspeare uses the word again in the same sense in Cymbeline:

“For ideots, in this case of favour, would

“Be wisely definite. —”

i. e. could tell how to pronounce or determine in the case.

WARBURTON.

Here are difficulties raised only to show how easily they can be removed. The plain sense is, I know not what to think otherwise, but that she loves him with an enraged affection: It (this affection) is past the infinite of thought. Here are no abrupt stops, or imperfect sentences. Infinite may well enough stand; it is used by more careful writers for indefinite: and the speaker only means, that thought, though in itself unbounded, cannot reach or estimate the degree of her passion. JOHNSON.

The meaning I think, is, — but with what an enraged affection she loves him, it is beyond the power of thought to conceive. MALONE.

Shakspeare has a similar expression in King John:

“Beyond the infinite and boundless reach

“Of mercy” —. STEEVENS.

counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. PEDRO. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

CLAUD. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite.

[Aside.

LEON. What effects, my lord! She will fit you,—
You heard my daughter tell you how.

CLAUD. She did, indeed.

D. PEDRO. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

LEON. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

BENE. [Aside.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

CLAUD. He hath ta'en the infection; hold it up.

[Aside.

D. PEDRO. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

LEON. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.

CLAUD. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: Shall I, says she, that have so oft encounter'd him with scorn, write to him that I love him?

LEON. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him: for she'll be up twenty times a night; and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper:<sup>s</sup>—my daughter tells us all.

<sup>s</sup> This says she now when she is beginning to write to him: for she'll be up twenty times a night; and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper: ] Shakspeare has more than once availed himself of such incidents as occurred to him from history, &c. to compliment the princes before whom his pieces were performed. A striking instance of flattery to James occurs in CLAUD. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

LEON. O! — When she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet? —

CLAUD. That.

LEON. O! she tore the letter into a thousand halfpence;<sup>9</sup> rail'd at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would flout her: I measure him, says she, by my own spirit, for I should flout him, if he writ to me; yea, though I love him, I should.

Macbeth; perhaps the passage here quoted was not less grateful to Elizabeth, as it apparently alludes to an extraordinary trait in one of the letters pretended to have been written by the hated Mary to Bothwell:

“ I am nakit, and ganging to sleep, and zit I cease not to scribble all this paper, in so meikle as rest is thair of.” That is, I am naked, and going to sleep, and yet I cease not to scribble to the end of my paper, much as there remains of it unwritten on.

HENLEY.

Mr. Henley's observation must fall to the ground; the word in every edition of Mary's letter which Shakspeare could possibly have seen, being irkit, not nakit.

“ I am irkit” means, I am uneasy. So, in As you like it:

“ And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools,” &c.

Again, in K. Henry VI:

“ It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.” STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> O! she tore the letter into a thousand halfpence; i. e. into a thousand pieces of the same bigness. So, in As you Like it:

“ they were all like one another, as halfpence are.” THEOBALD.

A farthing, and perhaps a halfpenny, was used to signify any small particle or division. So, in the character of the Prioress in Chaucer:

“ That in hire cuppe was no ferthing sene

“ Of gresse, whan she dronken hadde hire draught.”

Prol. to the Cant. Tales, Tyrwhitt's edit. v. 135. STEEVENS.

See Mortimeriados, by Michael Drayton, 4to. 1596:

“ She now begins to write unto her lover, —

“ Then turning back to read what she had writ,

“ She teyr the paper, and condemns her wit.” MALONE.

CLAUD. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, fobs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses; — O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!

LEON. She doth indeed; my daughter says so: and the ecstasy<sup>2</sup> hath so much overborne her, that my daughter is sometime afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself; It is very true.

D. PEDRO. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

CLAUD. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. PEDRO. An he should, it were an alms to hang him: She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

CLAUD. And she is exceeding wise.

D. PEDRO. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

LEON. O my lord, wisdom and blood<sup>3</sup> combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. PEDRO. I would, she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daff'd<sup>4</sup> all other respects, and <sup>2</sup> ——— and the ecstasy — ] i. e. alienation of mind. So, in The Tempest, Act III. sc. iii: — “Hinder them from what this ecstasy may now provoke them to.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— and blood — ] I suppose blood, in this instance, to mean nature, or disposition. So, in The Yorkshire Tragedy:

“For 'tis our blood to love what we're forbidden.”

STEEVENS.

Blood is here as in many other places used by our author in the sense of passion, or rather temperament of body. MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> ——— have daff'd — ] To daff is the same as to doff, to do off, to put aside. So, in Macbeth:

“—— to doff their dire distresses.” STEEVENS.

made her half myself: I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what he will say.

LEON. Were it good, think you?

CLAUD. Hero thinks surely, she will die: for she says, she will die if he love her not; and she will die ere she make her love known; and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will 'bate one breath of her accustom'd crossness.

D. PEDRO. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit. <sup>5</sup>

CLAUD. He is a very proper man. <sup>6</sup>

D. PEDRO. He hath, indeed, a good outward happiness.

CLAUD. 'Fore God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. PEDRO. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like wit.

LEON. And I take him to be valiant.

D. PEDRO. As Hector, I assure you: and in the <sup>5</sup> — contemptible spirit. ] That is, a temper inclined to scorn and contempt. It has been before remarked, that our author uses his verbal adjectives with great licence. There is therefore no need of changing the word with Sir Thomas Hanmer to contemptuous.

JOHNSON.

In the argument to Darius, a tragedy, by Lord Sterline, 1603, it is said, that Darius wrote to Alexander "in a proud and contemptible manner." In this place contemptible certainly means contemptuous.

Again, Drayton, in the 24th Song of his Polyolbion, speaking in praise of a hermit, says, that he,

"The mad tumultuous world contemptibly forsook,

"And to his quiet cell by Crowland him betook."

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — a very proper man. ] i. e. a very handsome one. So, in Othello:

"This Ludovico is a proper man," STEEVENS.

managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most christian-like fear.

LEON. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace; if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. PEDRO. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him, by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece: Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

CLAUD. Never tell him, my lord; let her wear it out with good counsel.

LEON. Nay, that's impossible; she may wear her heart out first.

D. PEDRO. Well, we'll hear further of it by your daughter; let it cool the while. I love Benedick well; and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.<sup>6</sup>

LEON. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

CLAUD. If he do not dote on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation. [Aside.]

D. PEDRO. Let there be the same net spread for her; and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter; that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner. [Aside.]

[Exeunt Don PEDRO, CLAUDIO, and LEONATO.]

<sup>6</sup> ——— unworthy so good a lady.] Thus the quarto, 1600. The first folio unnecessarily reads — “unworthy to have so good a lady.”
STEEVENS.

BENEDICK advances from the Arbour.

BENE. This can be no trick: The conference was sadly borne.<sup>7</sup> — They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady; it seems, her affections have their full bent.<sup>8</sup> Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am censured: they say, I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. — I did never think to marry: — I must not seem proud: — Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to mending. They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth. I can bear them witness: and virtuous; — 'tis so, I cannot reprove it: and wise, but for loving me: — By my troth, it is no addition to her wit; — nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. — I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have rail'd so long against marriage: But doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his youth, that he cannot endure in his age: Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No: The world must be peopled. When I said, I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married. — Here comes Beatrice: — By this day, she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

<sup>7</sup> — was sadly borne. ] i. e. was seriously carried on.

STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> have their full bent. ] Metaphor from the exercise of the bow. So, in Hamlet:

“ And here give up ourselves in the full bent,

“ To lay our service freely at your feet.”

The first folio reads — “the full bent.” I have followed the quarto, 1600. STEEVENS.

Enter BEATRICE.

BEAT. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

BENE. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

BEAT. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have come.

BENE. You take pleasure then in the message?

BEAT. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and choke a daw withal:—You have no stomach, signior; fare you well. [Exit.]

BENE. Ha! Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner—there's a double meaning in that. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me—that's as much as to say, Any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks:—If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain; if I do not love her, I am a Jew: I will go get her picture. [Exit.]

A C T III. S C E N E I.

LEONATO'S Garden.

Enter HERO, MARGARET, and URSULA.

HERO. Good Margaret, run thee into the parlour;
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice
Proposing with the Prince and Claudio:<sup>9</sup>
Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula
Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse
Is all of her; say, that thou overheard'st us;

<sup>9</sup> Proposing with the Prince and Claudio:] Proposing is conversing, from the French word — propos, discourse, talk. STEEVENS.

L'Epine, Sculp.

— Hero, Ursula, and Beatrice listening. — SHAKSPEARE.

Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing

Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it. 2
[They advance to the Bower.]

Much ado about nothing.

ACT. III SCEN. I.

*No, truly. Ursula, she is too disdainful;
I know, her spirits are as coy and wild
As haggards of the rock?*

*Urs. But are you sure
That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?*

And bid her steal into the, pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; — like favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it: — there will she hide her,

To listen our propose: <sup>2</sup> This is thy office,
Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

MARG. I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.

HERO. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come,
As we do trace this alley up and down,
Our talk must only be of Benedick:
When I do name him, let it be thy part
To praise him more than ever man did merit:
My talk to thee must be, how Benedick
Is sick in love with Beatrice: Of this matter
Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made,
That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin;

Enter BEATRICE, behind.

For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs
Close by the ground, to hear our conference.

URS. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait:
So angle we for Beatrice; who even now

Purpose, however, may be equally right. It depends only on the manner of accenting the word, which, in Shakspeare's time, was often used in the same sense as propose. Thus, in Knox's History of the Reformation in Scotland, p. 72: " — with him six persons; and getting entrie, held purpose with the porter." Again, p. 54, "After supper he held comfortable purpose of God's chosen children." REED.

Is couched in the woodbine coverture :
 Fear you not my part of the dialogue.

HERO. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing

Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it. —

[ They advance to the bower.

No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful ;
 I know, her spirits are as coy and wild
 As haggards of the rock. <sup>3</sup>

URS. But are you sure,
 That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely ?

HERO. So says the prince, and my new-trothed lord.

URS. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam ?

HERO. They did intreat me to acquaint her of it :
 But I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
 To wish him <sup>4</sup> wrestle with affection,
 And never to let Beatrice know of it.

URS. Why did you so ? Doth not the gentleman
 Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed, <sup>5</sup>
 As ever Beatrice shall couch upon ?

<sup>3</sup> As haggards of the rock. ] Turbervile, in his book of Falconry, 1575, tells us, that “ the haggard doth come from foreign parts a stranger and a passenger ; ” and Latham, who wrote after him, says, that, “ she keeps in subjection the most part of all the fowl that fly, insomuch, that the tassel gentle, her natural and chiefest companion, dares not come near that coast where she useth, nor sit by the place where she standeth. Such is the greatness of her spirit, she will not admit of any society, until such a time as nature worketh,” &c. So, in The tragical History of Didaco and Violenta, 1576 :

“ Perchaunce she's not of haggard's kind,
 “ Nor heart so hard to bend,” &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> To wish him — ] i. e. recommend or desire. So, in The Honest Whore, 1604 :

“ Go wish the surgeon to have great respect,” &c.
 Again, in The Hog hath lost his Pearl, 1614 : “ But lady mine that shall be, your father, hath wish'd me to appoint the day with you.” REED.

<sup>5</sup> — as full, &c. ] So in Othello :

“ What a full fortune doth the thick-lips owe ? ” &c.

HERO. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve
As much as may be yielded to a man:
But nature never fram'd a woman's heart
Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice:
Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprising<sup>6</sup> what they look on; and her wit
Values itself so highly, that to her
All matter else seems weak: <sup>7</sup>she cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor project of affection,
She is so self-endear'd.

URS. Sure, I think so;
And therefore, certainly, it were not good
She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.

HERO. Why, you speak truth: I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spell him backward: <sup>8</sup> if fair-faced,

Mr. M. Mason very justly observes, that what Ursula means to say is, "that he is as deserving of complete happiness in the marriage state, as Beatrice herself." STEEVENS.

To misprise is to undervalue, or take in a wrong light. So, in Troilus and Cressida:

" — a great deal misprising

" The knight oppos'd." STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> — that to her

All matter else seems weak:] So, in Love's Labour's Lost:

" — to your huge store

" Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor."

STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — spell him backward:] Alluding to the practice of witches in uttering prayers.

The following passages containing a similar train of thought, are from Lyly's Anatomy of Wit, 1581.

" If one be hard in conceiving, they pronounce him a dowlte: if given to studie, they proclaim him a dunce: if merry, a jester: if sad, a faint: if full of words, a sot: if without speech, a cypher: if one argue with him boldly, then is he impudent: if coldly, an innocent: if there be reasoning of divinitie, they cry, Quæ supra nos, nihil ad nos: if of humanitie, sententias loquitur carnifex."

Again, p. 44, b. " — if he be cleanly, they [women] term

She'd swear, the gentleman should be her sister;
 If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick,
 Made a foul blot:<sup>8</sup> if tall, a lance ill-headed;
 If low, an agate very vilely cut:<sup>9</sup> him proude : if meene in apparel, a sloven : if tall, a lungis : if shorte, a dwarfe : if bold, blunt : if shamefast, a cowarde," &c. P. 55: "If she be well set, then call her a bosse : if slender, a hassill twig: if nut brown, black as a coal : if well colour'd, a painted wall : if she be pleasant, then is she wanton : if fullen, a clowne : if honest, then is she coye." STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick,

Made a foul blot:] The antick was a buffoon character in the old English farces, with a *black*ed face, and a patch-work habit. What I would observe from hence is, that the name of antick or antique, given to this character, shows that the people had some traditional ideas of its being borrowed from the ancient mimes, who are thus described by Apuleius : "mimi centunculo, fuligine faciem obducti." WARBURTON.

I believe what is here said of the old English farces, is said at random. Dr. Warburton was thinking, I imagine, of the modern Harlequin. I have met with no proof that the face of the antick or Vice of the old English comedy was blackened. By the word black in the text, is only meant, as I conceive, swarthy, or dark brown. MALONE.

A black man means a man with a dark or thick beard, not a swarthy or dark-brown complexion, as Mr. Malone conceives. DOUCE.

When Hero says, that — "nature drawing of an antick, made a foul blot," she only alludes to a drop of ink that may casually fall out of a pen, and spoil a grotesque drawing. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> If low, an agate very vilely cut:] But why an agate, if low? For what likeness between a little man and an agate? The ancients, indeed, used this stone to cut upon; but very exquisitely. I make no question but the poet wrote :

—— an aglet very vilely cut :

An aglet was a tag of those points, formerly so much in fashion. These tags were either of gold, silver, or brass, according to the quality of the wearer; and were commonly in the shape of little images; or at least had a head cut at the extremity. The French call them, aiguillettes. Mezeray, speaking of Henry III's sorrow for the death of the princess of Conti, says, " — portant même sur les aiguillettes des petites têtes de mort." And as a tall man is before compared to a lance ill-headed; so, by the same figure, a little man is very aptly liken'd to an aglet ill-cut. WARBURTON.

If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds; <sup>2</sup>

The old reading is, I believe, the true one. Vilely cut may not only mean awkwardly worked by a tool into shape, but grotesquely veined by nature as it grew. To this circumstance, I suppose, Drayton alludes in his Muses' Elizium:

“ With th' agate, very oft that is “ Cut strangely in the quarry;
 “ As nature meant to show in this
 “ How she herself can vary.”

Pliny mentions that the shapes of various beings are to be discovered in agates; and Mr. Addison has very elegantly compared Shakspeare, who was born with all the seeds of poetry, to the agate in the ring of Pyrrhus, which, as Pliny tells us, had the figure of Apollo and the nine Muses in the veins of it, produced by the spontaneous hand of nature, without any help from art.

STEEVENS.

Dr. Warburton reads aglet, which was adopted, I think, too hastily by the subsequent editors. I see no reason for departing from the old copy. Shakspeare's comparisons scarcely ever answer completely on both sides. Dr. Warburton asks, “ What likeness is there between a little man and an agate ? ” No other than that both are small. Our author has himself in another place compared a very little man to an agate. “ Thou whorson mandrake, (says Falstaff to his page,) thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never so man'd with an agate till now.” Hero means no more than this: “ If a man be low, Beatrice will say that he is as diminutive and unhappily formed as an ill-cut agate.”

It appears both from the passage just quoted, and from one of Sir John Harrington's epigrams, 4to. 1618, that agates were commonly worn in Shakspeare's time:

The author to a daughter nine years old.

“ Though pride in damsels is a hateful vice,
 “ Yet could I like a noble-minded girl,
 “ That would demand me things of costly price,
 “ Rich velvet gowns, pendants, and chains of pearle,
 “ Cark'nets of agats, cut with rare device,” &c.

These lines, at the same time that they add support to the old reading, shew, I think, that the words “ vilely cut,” are to be understood in their usual sense, when applied to precious stones, viz. awkwardly wrought by a tool, and not, as Mr. Steevens supposes, grotesquely veined by nature. MALONE.

— a vane blown with all winds;] This comparison might

URS. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

HERO. No: not to be so odd, and from all fashions,
 As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable:
 But who dare tell her so? If I should speak,
 She'd mock me into air; O, she would laugh me
 Out of myself, press me to death with wit.<sup>3</sup>
 Therefore let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
 Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly:
 It were a better death than die with mocks;
 Which is as bad as die with tickling.<sup>4</sup>

URS. Yet tell her of it; hear what she will say.

A Comparison of the Life of Man:

" I may compare a man, againe,
 " Even like unto a twining vane,
 " That changeth even as doth the wind;
 " Indeed so is man's fickle mind." STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — press me to death —] The allusion is to an ancient punishment of our law, called peine forte & dure, which was formerly inflicted on those persons, who, being indicted, refused to plead. In consequence of their silence, they were pressed to death by an heavy weight laid upon their stomach. This punishment the good sense and humanity of the legislature have within these few years abolished. MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> Which is as bad as die with tickling.] The author meant that tickling should be pronounced as a trissyllable; tickeling. So, in Spenser, B. II. Canto xii.

" — a strange kind of harmony;
 " Which Guyon's senses softly tickeled," &c. MALONE.

URS. O, do not do your cousin such a wrong.
She cannot be so much without true judgement,

As she is priz'd to have,) as to refuse

HERO. He is the only man of Italy,

URS. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam,
Speaking my fancy; signior Benedick,

HERO. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name.

URS. His excellence did earn it, ere he had it.—
When are you married, madam?

HERO. Why, every day:—to-morrow: Come, go in;
I'll show thee some attires; and have thy counsel,
Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

URS. She's lim'd<sup>7</sup> I warrant you; we have caught HERO. If it prove so, then loving goes by haps;

Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps.

As you Like it, A & V. sc. iv.

“He is very swift and sententious.” STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> ——— argument,] This word seems here to signify discourse, or,
the powers of reasoning. JOHNSON.

Argument, in the present instance, certainly means conversation.
So, in King Henry IV. P. I. “—It would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.” STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> She's lim'd —] She is ensnared and entangled as a sparrow with birdlime. JOHNSON.

So, in The Spanish Tragedy:

“Which sweet conceits are lim'd with fly deceits.”
The folio reads — She's ta'en. STEEVENS.

SCENE II.

A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter Don PEDRO, CLAUDIO, BENEDICK, and LEONATO.

D. PEDRO. I do but stay till your marriage be consummate, and then go I toward Arragon.

CLAUD. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me.

<sup>7</sup> What fire is in mine ears?] Alluding to a proverbial saying of the common people, that their ears burn, when others are talking of them. WARBURTON.

The opinion from whence this proverbial saying is derived, is of great antiquity, being thus mentioned by Pliny: "Moreover is not this an opinion generally received. That when our ears do glow and tingle, some there be that in our absence doe talke of us?" Philemon Holland's Translation, B. XXVIII. p. 297. and Brown's Vulgar Errors. REED.

<sup>8</sup> Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand;] This image is taken from falconry. She had been charged with being as wild as haggards of the rock; she therefore says, that wild as her heart is, she will tame it to the hand. JOHNSON.

D. PEDRO. Nay, that would be as great a foil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it.<sup>9</sup> I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him:<sup>2</sup> he hath a heart as found as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.<sup>3</sup>

BENE. Gallants, I am not as I have been.

LEON. So say I; methinks, you are fadder.

CLAUD. I hope, he be in love.

D. PEDRO. Hang him, truant: there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

BENE. I have the tooth-ach.

D. PEDRO. Draw it.

BENE. Hang it!

<sup>9</sup> — as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it.] So, in Romeo and Juliet:

“As is the night before some festival,
“To an impatient child, that hath new robes,
“And may not wear them.” STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — the little hangman dare not shoot at him:] This character of Cupid came from the Arcadia of Sir Philip Sidney:

“Millions of yeares this old drivell Cupid lives;
“While still more wretch, more wicked he doth prove:
“Till now at length that Jove him office gives,
“(At Juno's suite, who much did Argus love,)
“In this our world a hangman for to be
“Of all those fooles that will have all they see.”

B. II. ch. xiv. FARMER.

<sup>3</sup> — as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; &c.] A cover allusion to the old proverb:

“As the fool thinketh
“So the bell clinketh.” STEEVENS.

CLAUD. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

D. PEDRO. What? sigh for the tooth-ach?

LEON. Where is but a humour, or a worm?

BENE. Well, Every one can master a grief,<sup>3</sup> but he that has it.

CLAUD. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. PEDRO. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises;<sup>4</sup> as, to be a Dutch-man to-day; a French-man to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once,<sup>5</sup> as, a German from the waist downward, all flocs;<sup>6</sup> and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no

<sup>3</sup> — can master a grief,] The old copies read corruptly — cannot. The correction was made by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> There is no appearance of fancy, &c.] Here is a play upon the word fancy, which Shakspeare uses for love as well as for humour, caprice, or affection. JOHNSON.

<sup>5</sup> — or in the shape of two countries at once, &c.] So, in The Seven deadly Sinnes of London, by Tho. Dekker, 1606. 4to. bl. 1. "For an Englishman's sute is like a traitor's bodie that hath been hanged, drawne, and quartered, and is set up in severall places: his codpiece is in Denmarke; the collar of his dublet and the belly, in France: the wing and narrow sleeve, in Italy: the short waste hangs ouer a Dutch botcher's stall in Utrich: his huge flocpes speaks Spanish: Polonia gives him the bootes, &c. — and thus we mocke euerie nation, for keeping one fashion, yet steale patches from euerie one of them, to peece out our pride; and are now laughing-stocks to them, because their cut so scurvily becomes us."

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — all flocs;] Slops are large loose breeches, or trowsers, worn only by sailors at present. They are mentioned by Jonson, in his Alchymist:

" — six great slops

" Bigger than three Dutch hoys."

Again, in Ram Alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611.

" — three pounds in gold

" These slops contain." STEEVENS.

Hence evidently the term slop-seller, for the venders of ready made clothes. NICHOLS, doublet:<sup>7</sup> Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.<sup>8</sup>

CLAUD. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: he brushes his hat o' mornings; What should that bode?

D. PEDRO. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

CLAUD. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him; and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis-balls.<sup>9</sup>

LEON. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. PEDRO. Nay, he rubs himself with civet: Can you smell him out by that?

CLAUD. That's as much as to say, The sweet youth's in love.

<sup>7</sup> — a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet:] There can be no doubt but we should read, all doublet, which corresponds with the actual dress of the old Spaniards. As the passage now stands, it is a negative description, which is in truth no description at all. M. MASON.

— no doublet:] or, in other words, all cloak. The words — “Or in the shape of two countries,” &c. to “no doublet,” were omitted in the folio, probably to avoid giving any offence to the Spaniards, with whom James became a friend in 1604. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> — have it appear he is.] Thus the quarto, 1600. The folio, 1623. reads — “have it to appear,” &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> — and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-balls.] So, in A wonderful, strange, and miraculous astrological Prognostication for this Year of our Lord 1591; written by Nashe, in ridicule of Richard Harvey: “— they may sell their haire by the pound, to stufte tennice balles.” STEEVENS.

Again, in Ram Alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611.

“Thy beard shall serve to stuff those balls by which I get me heat at tenice.”

Again, in The Gentle Craft, 1600.

“He'll shave it off, and stufte tenice balls with it.” HENDERSON.

D. PEDRO. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

CLAUD. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. PEDRO. Yea, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.

CLAUD. Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into a lute string,<sup>9</sup> and now governed by stops.

D. PEDRO. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him: Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

CLAUD. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. PEDRO. That would I know too; I warrant, one that knows him not.

CLAUD. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of all, dies for him.

D. PEDRO. She shall be buried with her face upwards.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>9</sup> — crept into a lute string,] Love-songs in our author's time were generally sung to the musick of the lute. So, in K. Henry IV. P. I: "— as melancholy as an old lion, or a lover's lute." MALONE.

<sup>2</sup> She shall be buried with her face upwards.] Thus the whole set of editions: but what is there any way particular in this? Are not all men and women buried so? Sure, the poet means, in opposition to the general rule, and by way of distinction, with her heels upwards, or face downwards. I have chosen the first reading, because I find it the expression in vogue in our author's time. THEOBALD.

This emendation, which appears to me very specious, is rejected by Dr. Warburton. The meaning seems to be, that she who acted upon principles contrary to others, should be buried with the same contrariety. JOHNSON.

Mr. Theobald quite mistakes the scope of the poet, who prepares the reader to expect somewhat uncommon or extraordinary; and the humour consists in the disappointment of that expectation, as at the end of Iago's poetry in Othello:

"She was a wight, (if ever such wight were) —

"To fuddle fools, and chronicle small beer." HEATH.

Theobald's conjecture may, however, be supported by a passage in The Wild Goose Chase of Beaumont and Fletcher:

BENE. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ach. —
Old signior, walk aside with me; I have studied “ ——— love cannot starve me;

“ For if I die o'th' first fit, I am unhappy,
“ And worthy to be buried with my heels upwards.”

Dr. Johnson's explanation may likewise be countenanced by a passage in an old black letter book, without date, intitled, A merye Jest of a man that was called HOWLEGLAS, &c. “How Howleglas was buried.” — “Thus as Howleglas was deade, than they brought him to be buryed. And as they would have put the coffyn into the pytte with 11 cordes, the corde at the fete brake, so that the fote of the coffyn fell into the botome of the pyt, and the coffyn stood bolt upryght in the middes of the grave. Then desired the people that stode about the grave that tyme, to let the coffyn to stand bolt upryght. For in his lyfe tyme he was a very marvelous man, &c. and shall be buryed as marvailously; and in this manner they left Howleglas,” &c.

That this book was once popular, may be inferred from Ben Jonson's frequent allusions to it in his Poetaster:

“What do you laugh, Owleglas?”

Again, in The Fortunate Isles, a Masque:

“ ——— What do you think of Owlglas,
“ Instead of him?”

And again, in The Sad Shepherd. This history was originally written in Dutch. The hero is there called Uyle-spegel. Under this title he is likewise introduced by Ben Jonson in his Alchymist, and the Masque and Pastoral already quoted. Menage speaks of Ulespeigle as a man famous for tromperies ingénieuses; adds that his Life was translated into French, and quotes the title-page of it. I have another copy published A Troyes, in 1714. the title of which differs from that set down by Menage.

The passage indeed, may mean only — She shall be buried in her lover's arms. So, in The Winter's Tale:

“Flo. What? like a corse?
“Per. No, like a bank for love to lie and play on;
“Not like a corse: — or if, — not to be buried,
“But quick and in my arms.”

On the whole, however, I prefer Mr. Theobald's conjecture to my own explanation. STEEVENS.

This last is, I believe, the true interpretation. Our author often quotes Lilly's Grammar; and here perhaps he remembered a phrase that occurs in that book, p. 59, and is thus interpreted: — “Tu cubas supinus, thou liest in bed with thy face upwards.” Heels and eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt BENEDICK and LEONATO.

D. PEDRO. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

CLAUD. 'Tis even so: Hero and Margaret have by this play'd their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another, when they meet.

Enter Don JOHN.

D. JOHN. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. PEDRO. Good den, brother.

D. JOHN. If your leisure serv'd, I would speak with you.

D. PEDRO. In private?

D. JOHN. If it please you; — yet count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of, concerns him.

D. PEDRO. What's the matter?

D. JOHN. Means your lordship to be married to-morrow? [ To CLAUDIO.

D. PEDRO. You know, he does.

D. JOHN. I know not that, when he knows what I know.

CLAUD. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

face never could have been confounded by either the eye or the ear.

Besides; Don Pedro is evidently playing on the word dies in Claudio's speech, which Claudio uses metaphorically, and of which Don Pedro avails himself to introduce an allusion to that consummation which he supposes Beatrice was dying for.

MALONE.

D. JOHN. You may think, I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest: For my brother, I think, he holds you well; and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage: surely, suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed!

D. PEDRO. Why, what's the matter?

D. JOHN. I came hither to tell you; and, circumstances shorten'd, (for she hath been too long a talking of,) the lady is disloyal.

CLAUD. Who? Hero?

D. JOHN. Even she; Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.<sup>3</sup>

CLAUD. Disloyal?

D. JOHN. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness; I could say, she were worse; think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window enter'd; even the night before her wedding day: if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

CLAUD. May this be so?

D. PEDRO. I will not think it.

D. JOHN. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know: if you will follow me. I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

CLAUD. If I see any thing to-night why I should not marry her to-morrow; in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

<sup>3</sup> — Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.] Dryden has transplanted this sarcasm into his All for Love:

"Your Cleopatra; Dolabella's Cleopatra; every man's Cleopatra." STEEVENS.

D. PEDRO. And, as I wooed for thee to obtain her,
I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. JOHN. I will disparage her no farther, till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. PEDRO. O day untowardly turned!

CLAUD. O mischief strangely thwarting!

D. JOHN. O plague right well prevented!
So will you say, when you have seen the sequel.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

A Street.

Enter DOGBERY and VERGES, <sup>4</sup> with the Watch.

DOGB. Are you good men and true?

VERG. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

DOGB. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being chosen for the prince's watch.

VERG. Well, give them their charge, <sup>5</sup> neighbour Dogberry.

DOGB. First, who think you the most defartless man to be constable?

<sup>4</sup> ——— Dogberry and Verges,] The first of these worthies had his name from the Dog-berry, i. e. the female cornel, a shrub that grows in the hedges in every county of England.

Verges is only the provincial pronunciation of Verjuice.

STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> Well, give them their charge,] To charge his fellows, seems to have been a regular part of the duty of the constable of the Watch. So, in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1639: "My watch is set — charge given — and all at peace." Again, in The Insatiated Countess, by Marston, 1603. "Come on, my hearts; we are the city's security — I'll give you your charge." MALONE.

1 WATCH. Hugh Oatcake, fir, or George Seacoal; for they can write and read.

DOGB. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal: God hath blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

2 WATCH. Both which, master constable, ——

DOGB. You have; I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favour, fir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore bear you the lantern: This is your charge; You shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name.

2 WATCH. How if he will not stand?

DOGB. Why then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

VERG. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

DOGB. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects: — You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and to talk, is most tolerable and not to be endured.

2 WATCH. We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.

DOGB. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen:<sup>6</sup> — Well, you are to call at all the ale-houfes, and bid those that are drunk <sup>6</sup> get them to bed.

6 —— bills be not stolen:] A bill is still carried by the watchmen at Litchfield. It was the old weapon of English infantry, which, says Temple, gave the most ghastly and deplorable wounds. It may be called securis falcata. JOHNSON.

About Shakspeare's time halberds were the weapons borne by the watchmen, as appears from Blount's Voyage to the Levant: "— certaine Janizaries, who with great staves guard each street, as our night watchmen with holberds in London." REED.

The weapons to which the care of Dogberry extends, are mentioned in Glapthorne's Wit in a Constable, 1639:

" ————— Well said, neighbours;

" You're chatting wisely o'er your bills and lanthorns,

" As becomes watchmen of discretion."

Again, in Arden of Feversham, 1592:

" ————— the watch

" Are coming tow'rd our house with glaives and bills."

The following representation of a watchman, with his bill on his shoulder, is copied from the title-page to Decker's O per se O, &c. 4to. 1612:

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> ——— bid those that are drunk —] Thus the quarto, 1600. The folio, 1623. reads — "bid them that," &c. STEEVENS.

2 WATCH. How if they will not?

DOGB. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 WATCH. Well, sir.

DOGB. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man: and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, why, the more is for your honesty.

2 WATCH. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

DOGB. Truly, by your office, you may; but, I think, they that touch pitch will be defiled: the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

VERG. You have been always called a merciful man, partner.

DOGB. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

VERG. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> If you hear a child cry &c.] It is not impossible but that part of this scene was intended as a burlesque on The Statutes of the Streets, imprinted by Wolfe, in 1595. Among these I find the following:

22. "No man shall blowe any horne in the night, within this citie, or whistle after the houre of nyne of the clock in the night, under paine of imprisonment.

23. "No man shall use to go with visoures, or disguised by night, under like paine of imprisonment.

24. "Made that night-walkers, and evildroppers, like punishment.

25. "No hammer-man, as a smith, a pewterer, a founder, and all artificers making great sound, shall not worke after the houre of nyne at night, &c.

2 WATCH. How if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear us?

DOGB. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying: for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baes, will never answer a calf when he bleats.

VERG. 'Tis very true.

DOGB. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince's own person; if you meet the prince in the night, you may slay him.

VERG. Nay by'r lady, that, I think, he cannot.

DOGB. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statues,<sup>7</sup> he may slay him: marry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is an offence to slay a man against his will.

VERG. By'r lady, I think, it be so.

DOGB. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any matter of weight chances, call up

30. "No man shall, after the houre of nyne at night, keepe any rule, whereby any such suddaine outcry be made in the still of the night, as making any affray, or beating his wyfe, or servant, or finging, or revyling in his house, to the disturbaunce of his neighbours, under payne of iii s. iiij d." &c. &c.

Ben Jonson, however, appears to have ridiculed this scene in the Induction to his Bartholomew-Fair:

"And then a substantial watch to have stole in upon 'em, and taken them away with mistaking words, as the fashion is in the stage practice." STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens observes, and I believe justly, that Ben Jonson intended to ridicule this scene in his Induction to Bartholomew-Fair; yet in his Tale of a Tub, he makes his wise men of Finsbury speak just in the same style, and blunder in the same manner, without any such intention. M. MASON.

me: keep your fellows' counfels and your own,<sup>8</sup> and good night, — Come, neighbour.

2 WATCH. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to-bed.

DOGB. Onewordmore, honestneighbours: I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night: Adieu, be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt DOGBERRY and VERGES.]

Enter BORACHIO and CONRADE.

BORA. What! Conrade. —

WATCH. Peace, stir not.

[Aside.]

BORA. Conrade, I say!

CON. Here, man, I am at thy elbow.

BORA. Mafs, and my elbow itch'd; I thought, there would a scab follow.

CON. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

BORA. Stand thee close then under this pent-house, for it drizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard,<sup>9</sup> utter all to thee.

WATCH. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

BORA. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

<sup>8</sup> — keep your fellows' counfels and your own, ] This is part of the oath of a grand juryman; and is one of many proofs of Shakspeare's having been very conversant, at some period of his life, with legal proceedings and courts of justice. MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> — like a true drunkard, ] I suppose, it was on this account that Shakspeare called him Borachio, from Borracho, Spanish, a drunkard; or Borracha, a leathern receptacle for wine. STEEVENS.

CON. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

BORA. Thou should'st rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich;<sup>9</sup> for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

CON. I wonder at it.

BORA. That shows, thou art unconfirm'd:<sup>2</sup> Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

CON. Yes, it is apparel.

BORA. I mean, the fashion.

CON. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

BORA. Tush! I may as well say, the fool's the fool. But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

WATCH. I know that Deformed; he has been a vile thief this seven year; he goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name.

BORA. Didst thou not hear somebody?

CON. No; 'twas the vane on the house.

BORA. See'st thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily he turns about all the hot bloods, between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reechy painting;<sup>3</sup> sometime, like god <sup>9</sup> — any villainy should be so rich; ] The sense absolutely requires us to read, villain. WARBURTON.

The old reading may stand. STEEVENS.

“ ——— he look'd so reechily,

“ Like bacon hanging on the chimney's roof.”
from Recan, Anglo-Saxon, to reek, fumare. STEEVENS.

Bel's priests <sup>4</sup> in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules <sup>5</sup> in the smirch'd <sup>6</sup> worm-eaten tapestry, where his codpiece seems as massy as his club?

CON. All this I see; and see, that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man: But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

<sup>4</sup> — like god Bel's priests — ] Alluding to some aukward representation of the story of Bel and the Dragon, as related in the Apocrypha. STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — sometime, like the shaven Hercules, &c. ] By the shaven Hercules is meant Sampson, the usual subject of old tapestry. In this ridicule on the fashion, the poet has not unartfully given a stroke at the barbarous workmanship of the common tapestry hangings, then so much in use. The same kind of raillery Cervantes has employed on the like occasion, when he brings his knight and squire to an inn, where they found the story of Dido and Æneas represented in bad tapestry. On Sancho's seeing the tears fall from the eyes of the forsaken queen as big as walnuts, he hopes that when their achievements became the general subject for these sorts of works, that fortune will send them a better artist. — What authorised the poet to give this name to Sampson was the folly of certain Christian mythologists, who pretend that the Grecian Hercules was the Jewish Sampson. The retinue of our author is to be commended: The sober audience of that time would have been offended with the mention of a venerable name on so light an occasion. Shakspeare is indeed sometimes licentious in these matters: But to do him justice, he generally seems to have a sense of religion, and to be under its influence. What Pedro says of Benedick, in this comedy, may be well enough applied to him: The man doth fear God, however it seems not to be in him by some large jests he will make. Warburton.

I believe that Shakspeare knew nothing of these Christian mythologists, and by the shaven Hercules meant only Hercules when shaved to make him look like a woman, while he remained in the service of Omphale, his Lydian mistress. Had the shaven Hercules been meant to represent Sampson, he would probably have been equipped with a jaw bone instead of a club. STEEVENS.

— smirch'd — ] Smirch'd is soiled, obscured. So, in As you Like it, Act I. sc. iii:

“And with a kind of umber smirch my face.” STEEVENS.

BORA. Not so neither: but know, that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress' chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night,—I tell this tale vilely:—I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

CON. And thought they, Margaret was Hero?

BORA. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 WATCH. We charge you in the prince's name, stand.

2 WATCH. Call up the right master constable: We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 WATCH. And one Deformed is one of them; I know him, he wears a lock.<sup>6</sup>

CON. Masters, masters,<sup>7</sup> —

<sup>6</sup> — wears a lock.] So, in The Return from Parnassus, 1606:

“He whose thin fire dwells in a smoky rooffe,

“Must take tobacco, and must wear a lock.”

See Dr. Warburton's note, A & V. sc. i. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> Con. Masters, masters, &c.] In former copies:

Con. Masters.

2 WATCH. You'll be made bring Deformed forth,
I warrant you.

CON. Masters, —

1 WATCH. Never speak; we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

BORA. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bill's.<sup>8</sup>

CON. A commodity in question,<sup>9</sup> I warrant you.
Come, we'll obey you. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter HERO, MARGARET, and URSULA.

HERO. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

URS. I will, lady.

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters never speak, we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

The regulation which I have made in this last speech, though against the authority of all the printed copies, I flatter myself, carries its proof with it. Conrade and Borachio are not designed to talk absurd nonsense. It is evident therefore, that Conrade is attempting his own justification; but is interrupted in it by the impertinence of the men in office. THEOBALD.

<sup>8</sup> — a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills. ]
Here is a cluster of conceits. Commodity was formerly as now, the usual term for an article of merchandise. To take up, besides its common meaning, (to apprehend,) was the phrase for obtaining goods on credit. "If a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, (says Falstaff,) then they must stand upon security." Bill was the term both for a single bond, and a halberd.

We have the same conceit in King Henry VI. P. II: "My lord, When shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?" MALONE.

<sup>9</sup> A commodity in question, ] i. e. a commodity subject to judicial trial or examination. Thus Hooker: "Whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault." STREEVENS.

HERO. And bid her come hither.

URS. Well.

[Exit URSULA.]

MARG. Troth, I think, your other rabato<sup>9</sup> were better.

HERO. No, pray thee, good Meg, I'll wear this.

MARG. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.

HERO. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

MARG. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner:<sup>2</sup> and your gown's a most rare fashion, i'faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.

HERO. O, that exceeds, they say.

MARG. By my troth it's but a night-gown in <sup>9</sup> — rabato — ] An ornament for the neck, a collar-band or kind of ruff. Fr. Rabat. Menage saith it comes from rabattre, to put back, because it was at first nothing but the collar of the shirt or shift turn'd back towards the shoulders. T. HAWKINS.

This article of dress is frequently mentioned by our ancient comic writers.

So, in the comedy of Law Tricks, &c. 1608:

“ Broke broad jests upon her narrow heel,
“ Pok'd her rebatoes, and survey'd her steel.”

Again, in Decker's Guls Hornbook, 1609: — “ Your stiff-necked rebatoes (that have more arches for pride to row under, than can stand under five London-bridges) durst not then,” &c.

Again, in Decker's Untrussing the Humorous Poet: “ What a miserable thing it is to be a noble bride! There's such delays in rising, in fitting gowns, in pinning rebatoes, in poaking,” &c.

The first and last of these passages will likewise serve for an additional explanation of the poking-sticks of steel, mentioned by Autolycus in The Winter's Tale. STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — if the hair were a thought browner:] i. e. the false hair attached to the cap; for we learn from Stubbes's Anatomic of Abuses, 1595, p. 40, that ladies were “ not simplie content with their own haire, but did buy up other haire either of horses, mares, or any other strange beasts, dying it of what collour they list themselves.”

respect of yours: Cloth of gold, and cuts, and laced with silver; set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves,<sup>2</sup> and skirts round, underborne with a bluish tinsel: but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

<sup>2</sup> — side-sleeve's,] Side-sleeves, I believe, mean long ones. So, in Greene's Farewell to Follie, 1617: "As great selfe-love lurketh in a side-gowne, as in a short armour." Again, in Laneham's Account of Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Kenelworth-Castle, 1575, the minstrel's "gown had side-sleeves down to the mid-leg," Clement Paston (See Paston Letters, Vol. I. p. 145, 2nd edit.) had "a short blue gown that was made of a side-gown." i. e. of a long one. Again, in The last Voyage of Captaine Frobisher, by Dionyse Settle, 12mo. bl. l. 1577: "They make their apparell with hoodes and tailes, &c. The men have them not so syde as the women."

Such long sleeves, within my memory, were worn by children, and were called hanging sleeves; a term which is preserved in a line, I think, of Dryden.

"And miss in hanging-sleeves now shakes the dice."

Side or syde in the North of England, and in Scotland, is used for long when applied to a garment, and the word has the same signification in the Anglo-Saxon and Danish. Vide Glossary to Gawaine Douglas's Virgil. To remove an appearance of tautology, as down-sleeves may seem synonymous with side-sleeves, a comma must be taken out, and the passage printed thus — "Set with pearls down sleeves, or down th' sleeves." The second paragraph of this note is copied from the Edinburgh Magazine, for Nov. 1786. STEEVENS.

Side-sleeves were certainly long-sleeves, as will appear from the following instances. Stowe's Chronicle, p. 327, tempore Hen. IV: "This time was used exceeding pride in garments, gownes with deepe and broad sleeves commonly called poke sleeves, the servants ware them as well as their masters, which might well have been called the receptacles of the devil, for what they stole they hid in their sleeves, whereof some hung downe to the feete, and at least to the knees, full of cuts and jagges, whereupon were made these verses: [i. e. by Tho. Hoccleve.]

"Now hath this land little neede of broomes

"To sweepe away the filth out of the streete,

"Sen side-sleeves of pennileffe groomes

"Will it up licke be it drie or weete."

Again, in Fitzherbert's Book of Husbandry: "Theyr cotes be so syde that they be fayne to tucke them up whan they ride, as women do theyr kyrtels whan they go to the market," &c. REED.

HERO. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

MARG. 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.<sup>3</sup>

HERO. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?

MARG. Of what, lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence, — a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll offend no body: Is there any harm in — the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise 'tis light, and not heavy: Ask my lady Beatrice else, here she comes.

Enter BEATRICE.

HERO. Good morrow, coz.

BEAT. Good morrow, sweet Hero.

HERO. Why, how now! do you speak in the sick tune?

BEAT. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

MARG. Clap us into — Light o' love;<sup>4</sup> that goes without a burden; do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

<sup>3</sup> 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man. ] So, in Troilus and Cressida:

" — the heavier for a whore." STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — Light o' love; ] This tune is alluded to in Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen. The gaoler's daughter, speaking of a horse, says:

"He gallops to the tune of Light o' love."

It is mentioned again in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:

"Best sing it to the tune of Light o' love."

And in The Noble Gentleman of Beaumont and Fletcher. Again, in A Gorgious Gallery of gallant Inventions, &c. 4to. 1578: "The lover exhorteth his lady to be constant to the tune of

"Attend go play thee —

"Not Light of love, lady," &c. STEEVENS.

BEAT. Yea, Light o' love, with your heels!—then if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.<sup>5</sup>

MARG. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

BEAT. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin; 'tis time you were ready. By my troth I am exceeding ill:—hey ho!

MARG. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?<sup>6</sup>

BEAT. For the letter that begins them all, H.<sup>7</sup>

This is the name of an old dance tune which has occurred already in The Two Gentlemen of Verona. I have lately recovered it from an ancient MS. and it is as follows:

SIR J. HAWKINS.

<sup>5</sup> — no barns.] A quibble between barns, repositories of corn, and bairns, the old word for children. JOHNSON.

So, in The Winter's Tale:

“Mercy on us, a barn! a very pretty barn!” STEEVENS.

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?] “Heigh ho for a husband, or the willing maid’s wants made known,” is the title of an old ballad in the Pepysian Collection, in Magdalen College, Cambridge. MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> For the letter that begins them all, H.] This is a poor jest, somewhat obscured, and not worth the trouble of elucidation.

Margaret asks Beatrice for what she cries, hey ho; Beatrice answers, for an H, that is for an ache, or pain. JOHNSON.

MARG. Well, an you be not turn'd Turk,<sup>8</sup> there's no more failing by the star.

BEAT. What means the fool, trow?<sup>9</sup>

MARG. Nothing I; but God fend every one their heart's desire!

HERO. These gloves the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.

BEAT. I am stuff'd, cousin, I cannot smell.

MARG. A maid, and stuff'd! there's goodly catching of cold.

BEAT. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you profess'd apprehension?

MARG. Ever since you left it: Doth not my wit become me rarely?

BEAT. It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap. — By my troth, I am sick.

Heywood, among his Epigrams, published in 1566, has one on the letter H:

" H is worst among letters in the cross-row;
 " For if thou find him either in thine elbow,
 " In thine arm, or leg, in any degree;
 " In thine head, or teeth, or toe, or knee;
 " Into what place soever H may pike him,
 " Wherever thou find ache thou shalt not like him."

STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> — turn'd Turk,] i. e. taken captive by love, and turned a renegado to his religion. WARBURTON.

This interpretation is somewhat far-fetched, yet, perhaps, it is right. JOHNSON.

Hamlet uses the same expression, and talks of his fortune's turning Turk. To turn Turk, was a common phrase for a change of condition or opinion. So, in The Honest Whore, by Decker, 1616:

" If you turn Turk again," &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> What means the fool, trow?] This obsolete exclamation of enquiry, is corrupted from I trow, or trow you, and occurs again in The Merry Wives of Windsor: "who's there, trow?" To trow is to imagine, to conceive. So, in Romeo and Juliet, the Nurse says: " 'Twas no need, I trow, to bid me trudge." STEEVENS.

MARG. Get you some of this distill'd Carduus Benedictus,<sup>2</sup> and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a qualm.

HERO. There thou prick'st her with a thistle.

BEAT. Benedictus! why Benedictus? you have some moral<sup>3</sup> in this Benedictus.

MARG. Moral? no, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant, plain holy-thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love: nay, by'r lady, I am not such a fool to think what I list; nor I list not to think what I can; nor, indeed, I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man: he swore he would never marry; and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging:<sup>4</sup> and <sup>2</sup> — Carduus Benedictus, ] “ Carduus Benedictus, or blessed thistle (says Cogan in his Haven of Health, 1595) so worthily named for the singular virtues that it hath.” — “ This herbe may worthily be called Benedictus, or Omnimorbia, that is, a salve for every sore, not knowen to physitians of old time, but lately revealed by the speciall providence of Almighty God.” STEEVENS.

Dr. Johnson's explanation is certainly the true one, though it has been doubted. In The Rape of Lucrece our author uses the verb to moralize in the same sense:

“ Nor could she moralize his wanton fight.”

i. e. investigate the latent meaning of his looks.

Again, in The Taming of the Shrew: “ — and has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.” MALONE.

Moralizations (for so they were called) are subjoined to many of our ancient Tales, reducing them into Christian or moral lessons. See the Gesta Romanorum, &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — he eats his meat without grudging: ] I do not see how this is a proof of Benedick's change of mind. It would afford more proof of amorousness to say, he eats not his meat without grudging; but it is impossible to fix the meaning of proverbial expressions:

how you may be converted, I know not; but methinks, you look with your eyes as other women do.<sup>3</sup>

BEAT. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

MARG. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter URSULA.

URS. Madam, withdraw; the prince, the count, signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

HERO. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula. [ Exeunt.

Another Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, with DOGBERRY and VERGES.

LEON. What would you with me, honest neighbour?

DOGB. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you, that decerns you nearly.

LEON. Brief, I pray you; for you see, 'tis a busy time with me.

DOGB. Marry, this it is, sir.

VERG. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

LEON. What is it, my good friends?

perhaps, to eat meat without grudging, was the same as, to do as others do, and the meaning is, he is content to live by eating like other mortals, and will be content, notwithstanding his boasts, like other mortals, to have a wife. JOHNSON.

Johnson considers this passage too literally. The meaning of it is, that Benedick is in love, and takes kindly to it. M. MASON.

The meaning, I think, is, "and yet now, in spite of his resolution to the contrary, he feeds on love, and likes his food." MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> ——— you look with your eyes as other women do.] i. e. you direct your eyes toward the same object; viz. a husband. STEEVENS.

DOGB. Goodman Verges, fir, ſpeaks a little off the matter: an old man, fir, and his wits are not ſo blunt, as, God help, I would deſire they were; but in faith; honeſt, as the ſkin between his brows. <sup>4</sup>

VERG. Yes, I thank God, I am as honeſt as any man living, that is an old man, and no honeſter than I. <sup>5</sup>

DOGB. Compariſons are odorous: palabras, <sup>6</sup> neighbour Verges.

LEON. Neighbours, you are tedious.

DOGB. It pleaſes your worſhip to ſay ſo, but we are the poor duke's officers; <sup>7</sup> but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to beſtow it all of your worſhip.

<sup>4</sup> ——— honeſt, as the ſkin between his brows. ] This is a proverbial expreſſion. STEEVENS.

So, in Gammar Gurton's Needle, 1575:

“ I am as true, I would thou knew, as ſkin betwene thy brows.”
Again, in Cartwright's Ordinary, A & V. ſc. ii:

“ I am as honeſt as the ſkin that is between thy brows.”

REED.

<sup>5</sup> I am as honeſt as any man living, that is an old man, and no honeſter than I. ] There is much humour, and extreme good ſenſe under the covering of this blundering expreſſion. It is a ſly inſinuation, that length of years, and the being much hacknied in the ways of men, as Shakspeare expreſſes it, take off the gloſs of virtue, and bring much defilement on the manners. For, as a great wit [Swift] ſays, Youth is the ſeaſon of virtue: corruptions grow with years, and I believe the oldeſt rogue in England is the greateſt.

WARBURTON.

Much of this is true, but I believe Shakspeare did not intend to beſtow all this reflection on the ſpeaker. JOHNSON.

<sup>6</sup> ——— palabras, ] So, in The Taming of the Shrew, the Tinker ſays, pocas pallabras, i. e. few words. A ſcrap of Spaniſh, which might once have been current among the vulgar, and had appeared, as Mr. Henley obſerves, in The Spaniſh Tragedy: “ Pocas pallabras, milde as the lambe.” STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> ——— we are the poorduke's officers; ] This ſtroke of pleaſantry has already occurred in Measure for Measure, A & II. ſc. i. where Elbow ſays: — “ If it pleaſe your honour, I am the poor duke's conſtable.” STEEVENS.

LEON. All thy tediousness on me! ha!

DOGB. Yea, and 'twere a thousand times more than 'tis: for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as of any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

VERG. And so am I.

LEON. I would fain know what you have to say.

VERG. Marry, fir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have ta'en a couple of as arrant knaves as any in Messina.

DOGB. A good old man, fir; he will be talking; as they say, When the age is in, the wit is out; God help us! it is a world to see!<sup>7</sup> — Well said, i'faith, neighbour Verges: — well, God's a good man;<sup>8</sup> An two men ride of a horse, one must ride <sup>7</sup> — it is a world to see! ] i. e. it is wonderful to see. So, in All for Money, an old morality, 1594: "It is a world to see how greedy they be of money." The same phrase often occurs, with the same meaning, in Holinshed. STEEVENS.

Again, in a letter from the Earl of Worcester to the Earl of Salisbury, 1609: "While this tragedee was acting yt was a world to heare the reports heare."

Lodge's Illustrations, Vol. III. p. 380. REED.

Rather, it is worth seeing. Barret in his Alvearie, 1580, explains "It is a world to heare," by it is a thing worthie the hearing. Audire est operæ pretium. Horat.

And in The Myrrour of good manners compyled in latyn by Domynike Mancyn and translate into englyshe by Alexander Bercley prest. Imprinted by Rychard Rynson, bl. l. no date, the line "Est operæ pretium doctos spectare colonos" — is rendered "A world it is to se wyse tyllers of the ground." HOLT WHITE.

<sup>8</sup> — well, God's a good man; ] So, in the old Morality or Interlude of Lusty Juventus:

"He wyl say, that God is a good Man,

"He can make him no better, and say the best he can."

Again in A mery Geste of Robin Hood, bl. l. no date:

"For God is hold a right wise man,

"And so is his dame," &c. STEEVENS.

behind:<sup>9</sup> — An honest soul, i'faith, fir; by my troth he is, as ever broke bread: but, God is to be worshipp'd: All men are not alike; alas good neighbour!

LEON. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

DOGB. Gifts, that God gives.

LEON. I must leave you.

DOGB. One word, fir: our watch, fir, have, indeed, comprehended two aspicuous persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

LEON. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me; I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

DOGB. It shall be suffigance.

LEON. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger:

MESS. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

LEON. I will wait upon them; I am ready.

[ Exeunt LEONATO and Messenger.

DOGB. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Seacoal, bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol; we are now to examination these men.

<sup>9</sup> — An two men ride, &c.] This is not out of place, or without meaning. Dogberry, in his vanity of superior parts, apologizing for his neighbour, observes, that of two men on an horse, one must ride behind. The first place of rank or understanding can belong but to one, and that happy one ought not to despise his inferiour. JOHNSON.

VERG. And we must do it wisely.

DOGB. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that [Touching his forehead.] shall drive some of them to a non com:<sup>2</sup> only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol. [Exeunt.]

LEON. Come, friar Francis, be brief; only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

FRIAR. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

CLAUD. No.

LEON. To be married to her, friar; you come to marry her.

FRIAR. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

HERO. I do.

FRIAR. If either of you know any inward impediment<sup>3</sup> why you should not be conjoined, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it.

<sup>2</sup> ——— to a non com: ] i. e. to a non compos mentis; put them out of their wits: — or perhaps he confounds the term with non-plus.

MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> If either of you know any inward impediment, &c. ] This is borrowed from our Marriage Ceremony, which (with a few slight changes in phraseology) is the same as was used in the time of Shakspeare.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

CLAUD. Know you any, Hero?

HERO. None, my lord.

FRIAR. Know you any, count?

LEON. I dare make his answer, none.

CLAUD. O, what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do! not knowing what they do!

BENE. How now! Interjections? Why, then some be of laughing, <sup>4</sup> as, ha! ha! he!

CLAUD. Stand thee by, friar: — Father, by your leave;

Will you with free and unconstrained soul
Give me this maid, your daughter?

LEON. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

CLAUD. And what have I to give you back, whose worth

May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

D. PEDRO. Nothing, unless you render her again.

CLAUD. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness. —

There, Leonato, take her back again;

Give not this rotten orange to your friend;

She's but the sign and semblance of her honour: —

Behold, how like a maid she blushes here:

O, what authority and show of truth

Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

Comes not that blood, as modest evidence,

To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,

All you that see her, that she were a maid,

By these exterior shows? But she is none:

<sup>4</sup> — some be of laughing, ] This is a quotation from the Accidence.
JOHNSON.

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed: <sup>5</sup>

Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

LEON. What do you mean, my lord?

CLAUD. Not to be married,
Not knit my soul <sup>6</sup> to an approved wanton.

LEON. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof <sup>7</sup>
Have vanquish'd the resistance of her youth,
And made defeat of her virginity, ——

CLAUD. I know what you would say; If I have known her,

You'll say, she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the 'forehand sin:

No, Leonato,

I never tempted her with word too large; <sup>8</sup>

But, as a brother to his sister, shew'd

Bashful sincerity, and comely love.

HERO. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

CLAUD. Out on thy seeming! <sup>9</sup> I will write against it: <sup>2</sup>

<sup>5</sup> —— luxurious bed: ] That is, lascivious. Luxury is the confessor's term for unlawful pleasures of the sex. JOHNSON.

Thus Pistol, in King Henry V. calls Fluellen a

“ —— damned and luxurious mountain goat.” STEEVENS.

Again, in The Life and Death of Edward II. p. 129:

“ Luxurious Queene, this is thy foule desire.” REED.

<sup>6</sup> Not knit my soul, &c. ] The old copies read, injuriously to metre, — Not to knit, &c. I suspect, however, that our author wrote — Nor knit, &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof — ] In your own proof may signify in your own trial of her. TYRWHITT.

Dear like door, fire, hour, and many similar words, is here used as a dissyllable. MALONE.

<sup>8</sup> —— word too large; ] So he uses large jests in this play, for licentious, not restrained within due bounds. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> —— thy seeming ] The old copies have thee. The emendation is Mr. Pope's. In the next line Shakspeare probably wrote — seem'd. MALONE.

You seem to me as Dian in her orb;
As chaste as is the bud<sup>3</sup> ere it be blown;
But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.

HERO. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide?<sup>4</sup>

LEON. Sweet prince, why speak not you?

D. PEDRO. What should I speak?
I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.

LEON. Are these things spoken? or do I but dream?<sup>5</sup>

D. JOHN. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

BENE. This looks not like a nuptial.

HERO. True, O God!

CLAUD. Leonato, stand I here?
Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?
Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own?

LEON. All this is so; But what of this, my lord?

<sup>2</sup> — I will write against it: ] So, in Cymbeline, Posthumus speaking of women, says,

“ — I'll write against them,

“ Detest them, curse them.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — chaste as is the bud — ] Before the air has tasted its sweetness. JOHNSON.

<sup>4</sup> — that he doth speak so wide? ] i. e. so remotely from the present business. So, in Troilus and Cressida: — “No, no; no such matter, you are wide.” Again, in The Merry Wives of Windsor: “I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> Are these things spoken? or do I but dream? ] So, in Macbeth:

“Were such things here, as we do speak about?”

“Or have we,” &c. STEEVENS.

CLAUD. Let me but move one question to your daughter;
And, by that fatherly and kindly power<sup>3</sup>
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

LEON. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.

HERO. O God defend me! how am I beset! —
What kind of catechizing call you this?

CLAUD. To make you answer truly to your name.

HERO. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?

CLAUD. Marry, that can Hero?
Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.

HERO. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. PEDRO. Why, then are you no maiden. —

Leonato,

I am sorry you must hear; Upon mine honour,
Myself, my brother, and this grieved count,
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window;
Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain,<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> — kindly power. — ] That is, natural power. Kind is nature. JOHNSON.

Thus, in the Introduction to The Taming of the Shrew;

“ This do, and do it kindly, gentle firs.”

i. e. naturally. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — liberal villain, ] Liberal here, as in many places of these plays, means frank beyond honesty, or decency. Free of tongue. Dr. Warburton unnecessarily reads, illiberal. JOHNSON.

So, in The Fair Maid of Brisslow, 1605:

“ But Vallinger, most like a liberal villain

“ Did give her scandalous ignoble terms.”

Again, in The Captain, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

“ And give allowance to your liberal jests

“ Upon his person.” STEEVENS.

Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.

D. JOHN. Fie, fie! they are Not to be nam'd, my lord, not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence, to utter them: Thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

CLAUD. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou been,<sup>5</sup>
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!
But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou pure impiety, and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eye-lids shall conjecture<sup>6</sup> hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.<sup>7</sup>

LEON. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?<sup>8</sup> [HERO swoons.

BEAT. Why, how now, cousin? wherefore sink you down?

This sense of the word liberal is not peculiar to Shakspeare. John Taylor, in his Suite concerning Players, complains of the "many aspersions very liberally, unmannerly, and ingratefully bestowed upon him." FARMER.

<sup>7</sup> And never shall it more be gracious.] i. e. lovely, attractive. MALONE.

So, in King John:

"There was not such a gracious creature born." STEEVENS.

<sup>8</sup> Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?] So, in Venice Preserv'd:

"A thousand daggers, all in honest hands!

"And have not I a friend to stick one here?" STEEVENS.

D. JOHN. Come, let us go: these things, come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.

[ Exeunt Don PEDRO, Don JOHN, and CLAUDIO.

BENE. How doth the lady?

BEAT. Dead, I think; — Help, uncle; — Hero! why, Hero! — Uncle! — Signior Benedick! —
friar!

LEON. O fate, take not away thy heavy hand!
Death is the fairest cover for her shame,
That may be wish'd for.

BEAT. How now, cousin Hero?

FRIAR. Have comfort, lady.

LEON. Dost thou look up?<sup>8</sup>

FRIAR. Yea; Wherefore should she not?

LEON. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing

Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?<sup>9</sup> —
Do not live, Hero, do not ope thine eyes:
For did I think thou would'st not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames,
Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life. Griev'd I, I had but one?
Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?<sup>2</sup>

<sup>9</sup> The story that is printed in her blood? ] That is, the story which her blushes discover to be true. JOHNSON.

<sup>2</sup> Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame? ] Frame is contrivance, order, disposition of things. So, in The Death of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1603:

“ And therefore seek to set each thing in frame.”

Again, in Holinshed's Chronicle, p. 555: “ — there was no man that studied to bring the unrulie to frame.”

O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
 Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
 Why had I not, with charitable hand,
 Took up a beggar's issue at my gates;
 Who smirched thus,<sup>3</sup> and mired with infamy,
 I might have said, No part of it is mine,
This shame derives itself from unknown loins?
 But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,
 And mine that I was proud on; mine so much,

Again, in Daniel's Verses on Montaigne:

“ ——— extracts of men,

“ Though in a troubled frame confus'dly set.”

Again, in this play:

“ Whose spirits toil in frame of villainies.” STEEVENS.

It seems to me, that by frugal nature's frame, Leonato alludes to the particular formation of himself, or of Hero's mother, rather than to the universal system of things. Frame means here framing, as it does where Benedick says of John, that

“ His spirits toil in frame of villainies.”

Thus Richard says of Prince Edward, that he was “ Fram'd in the prodigality of nature.”

And, in All's well that ends well, the King says to Bertram:

“ Frank nature, rather curious than in haste,

“ Hath well compos'd thee.”

But Leonato, dissatisfied with his own frame, was wont to complain of the frugality of nature. M. MASON.

The meaning, I think, is, — Grieved I at nature's being so frugal as to have framed for me only one child? MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> Who smirched thus, &c.] Thus the quarto, 1600. The folio reads — “ smeared.” To smirch is to daub, to sully. So, in King Henry V:

“ Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd.” &c. STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd,

And mine that I was proud on;] The sense requires that we should read, as in these three places. The reasoning of the speaker stands thus — Had this been my adopted child, her shame would not have rebounded on me. But this child was mine, as mine I lov'd her, praised her, was proud of her: consequently, as I claimed the glory, I must needs be subject to the shame, &c. WARBURTON.

Even of this small alteration there is no need. The speaker utters his emotion abruptly. But mine, and mine that I lov'd, &c. by an ellipsis frequent, perhaps too frequent, both in verse and prose. JOHNSON.

That I myself was to myself not mine,
 Valuing of her; why, she — O, she is fallen
 Into a pit of ink! that the wide sea
 Hath drops too few to wash her clean again,<sup>2</sup>
 And salt too little, which may season give
 To her foul tainted flesh!

BENE. Sir, sir, be patient:
 For my part, I am so attir'd in wonder,
 I know not what to say.

BEAT. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied!

BENE. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

BEAT. No, truly, not; although, until last night,
 I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.

LEON. Confirm'd, confirm'd! O, that is stronger made,

Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron!
 Would the two princes lie? and Claudio lie?
 Who lov'd her so, that, speaking of her foulness,
 Wash'd it with tears? Hence from her; let her die.

FRIAR. Hear me a little;
 For I have only been silent so long,
 And given way unto this course of fortune,
 By noting of the lady: I have mark'd
 A thousand blushing apparitions start
 Into her face; a thousand innocent shames
 In angel whiteness bear away those blushes;

<sup>2</sup> ——— the wide sea

Hath drops too few to wash her clean again; ] The same thought is repeated in Macbeth:

“ Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood

“ Clean from my hand?” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> ——— which may season give

To her foul tainted flesh! ] The same metaphor from the kitchen occurs in Twelfth Night:

“ ——— all this to season

“ A brother's dead love.” STEEVENS.

And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire,
To burn the errors <sup>4</sup> that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth: — Call me a fool;
Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal doth warrant
The tenour of my book; <sup>5</sup> trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error.

LEON. Friar, it cannot be:
Thou seest, that all the grace that she hath left,
Is, that she will not add to her damnation
A sin of perjury; she not denies it:
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness?

FRIAR. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of? <sup>6</sup>

HERO. They know, that do accuse me; I know none:

If I know more of any man alive,

<sup>4</sup> To burn the errors — ] The same idea occurs in Romeo and Juliet:

“Transparent hereticks be burnt for liars.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — of my book; ] i. e. of what I have read. MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> Friar. — what man is he you are accus'd of? ] The friar had just before boasted his great skill in fishing out the truth. And, indeed, he appears by this question to be no fool. He was by, all the while at the accusation, and heard no name mentioned. Why then should he ask her what man she was accused of? But in this lay the subtilty of his examination. For, had Hero been guilty, it was very probable that in that hurry and confusion of spirits, into which the terrible insult of her lover had thrown her, she would never have observed that the man's name was not mentioned; and so, on this question, have betrayed herself by naming the person she was conscious of an affair with. The Friar observed this, and so concluded, that were she guilty, she would probably fall into the trap he laid for her. — I only take notice of this to show how admirably well Shakspeare knew how to sustain his characters. WARBURTON.

Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,
 Let all my sins lack mercy! — O my father,
 Prove you that any man with me convers'd
 At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
 Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
 Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death.

FRIAR. There is some strange misprision in the princes.

BENE. Two of them have the very bent of honour;<sup>6</sup>

And if their wisdoms be mislaid in this,
 The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
 Whose spirits toil in frame of villainies.

LEON. I know not; If they speak but truth of her,
 These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her honour,

The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
 Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
 Nor age so eat up my invention,
 Nor fortune made such havock of my means,
 Nor my bad life rest me so much of friends,
 But they shall find, awak'd in such a kind,
 Both strength of limb, and policy of mind,
 Ability in means, and choice of friends,
 To quit me of them thoroughly.

FRIAR. Pause a while,
 And let my counsel sway you in this case.
 Your daughter here the princes left for dead;<sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> — bent of honour; ] Bent is used by our author for the utmost degree of any passion, or mental quality.— In this play before, Benedick says of Beatrice, her affection has its full bent. The expression is derived from archery; the bow has its bent, when it is drawn as far as it can be. JOHNSON.

<sup>7</sup> Your daughter here the princes left for dead; ] In former copies
 But how comes Hero to start up a princess here? We have no

Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed:
Maintain a mourning ostentation;<sup>8</sup>
And on your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

LEON. What shall become of this? What will this do?

FRIAR. Marry, this, well carried, shall on her behalf

Change slander to remorse; that is some good:
But not for that, dream I on this strange course.
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Upon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pitied and excus'd,
Of every hearer: For it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value;<sup>9</sup> then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us
Whiles it was ours:—So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,<sup>2</sup> intimation of her father being a prince; and this is the first and only time she is complimented with this dignity. The remotion of a single letter, and of the parenthesis, will bring her to her own rank, and the place to its true meaning:

Your daughter here the princes left for dead;

i. e. Don Pedro, prince of Arragon; and his bastard brother, who is likewise called a prince. THEOBALD.

<sup>8</sup> ——— ostentation; ] Show, appearance. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> ——— we rack the value; ] i. e. we exaggerate the value. The allusion is to rack-rents. The same kind of thought occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:

“What our contempts do often hurl from us,

“We wish it ours again.” STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> ——— died upon his words, ] i. e. died by them. So, in A Midsummer Night's Dream:

“To die upon the hand I love so well.” STEEVENS.

The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
 Into his study of imagination;
 And every lovely organ of her life
 Shall come apparel'd in more precious habit,
 More moving-delicate, and full of life,
 Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
 Than when she liv'd indeed:—then shall he mourn,
 (If ever love had interest in his liver, <sup>2</sup>)
 And wish he had not so accused her;
 No, though he thought his accusation true.
 Let this be so, and doubt not but success
 Will fashion the event in better shape
 Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
 But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
 The supposition of the lady's death
 Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
 And, if it fort not well, you may conceal her
 (As best befits her wounded reputation,)
 In some reclusive and religious life,
 Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.

BENE. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
 And though, you know, my inwardness <sup>3</sup> and love
 Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
 Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
 As secretly, and justly, as your soul
 Should with your body.

LEON. Being that I flow in grief,
 The smallest twine may lead me. <sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> If ever love had interest in his liver,] The liver, in conformity to ancient supposition, is frequently mentioned by Shakspeare as the seat of love. Thus Pistol represents Falstaff as loving Mrs. Ford — “with liver burning hot.” STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — my inwardness —] i. e. intimacy. Thus Lucio, in Measure for Measure, speaking of the Duke, says — “I was an inward of his.” Again, in King Richard III:

“Who is most inward with the noble duke?” STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> The smallest twine may lead me.] This is one of our author's

FRIAR. 'Tis well consented; presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure. —

Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day,
Perhaps, is but prolong'd; have patience, and endure.

[ Exeunt FRIAR, HERO, and LEONATO.

BENE. Lady Beatrice, ' have you wept all this while?

BEAT. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.

BENE. I will not desire that.

BEAT. You have no reason, I do it freely.

BENE. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wrong'd.

BEAT. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me, that would right her!

BENE. Is there any way to show such friendship?

BEAT. A very even way, but no such friend.

BENE. May a man do it?

observations upon life. Men overpowered with distress, eagerly listen to the first offers of relief, close with every scheme, and believe every promise. He that has no longer any confidence in himself, is glad to repose his trust in any other that will undertake to guide him. JOHNSON.

' Lady Beatrice, &c. ] The poet, in my opinion, has shown a great deal of address in this scene. Beatrice here engages her lover to revenge the injury done her cousin Hero: and without this very natural incident, considering the character of Beatrice, and that the story of her passion for Benedick was all a fable, she could never have been easily or naturally brought to confess she loved him, notwithstanding all the foregoing preparation. And yet, on this confession, in this very place, depended the whole success of the plot upon her and Benedick. For had she not owned her love here, they must have soon found out the trick, and then the design of bringing them together had been defeated; and she would never have owned a passion she had been only tricked into, had not her desire of revenging her cousin's wrong made her drop her capricious humour at once. WARBURTON.

BEAT. It is a man's office, but not yours.

BENE. I do love nothing in the world so well as you; Is not that strange?

BEAT. As strange as the thing I know not: It were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not; I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing:—I am sorry for my cousin.

BENE. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.

BEAT. Do not swear by it, and eat it.

BENE. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says, I love not you.

BEAT. Will you not eat your word?

BENE. With no sauce that can be devised to it: I protest, I love thee.

BEAT. Why then, God forgive me!

BENE. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

ACT IV. SCENE II.

SCENE II.<sup>2</sup>A Prison.

Enter DOGBERRY, VERGES, and Sexton, in gowns; <sup>3</sup> and the Watch, with CONRADE and BORACHIO.

DOGB. Is our whole dissembly appear'd?

<sup>2</sup> Scene II. ] The persons, throughout this scene, have been strangely confounded in the modern editions. The first error has been the introduction of a Town-Clerk, who is, indeed, mentioned in the stage-direction, prefixed to this scene in the old editions, (Enter the Constables, Borachio, and the Towne-Clerke, in gownes,) but no where else; nor is there a single speech ascribed to him in those editions. The part, which he might reasonably have been expected to take upon this occasion, is performed by the Sexton; who assists at, or rather directs, the examinations; sets them down in writing, and reports them to Leonato. It is probable, therefore, I think, that the Sexton has been styled the Town-Clerk, in the stage-direction above-mentioned, from his doing the duty of such an officer. But the editors, having brought both Sexton and Town-Clerk upon the stage, were unwilling, as it seems, that the latter should be a mute personage; and therefore they have put into his mouth almost all the absurdities which the poet certainly intended for his ignorant constable. To rectify this confusion, little more is necessary than to go back to the old editions, remembering that the names of Kempe and Cowley, two celebrated actors of the time, are put in this scene, for the names of the persons represented; viz. Kempe for Dogberry, and Cowley for Verges. TYRWHITT.

I have followed Mr. Tyrwhitt's regulation, which is undoubtedly just; but have left Mr. Theobald's notes as I found them.

STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — in gowns; ] It appears from The Black Book, 4to. 1604, that this was the dress of a constable in our author's time: "— when they mist their constable, and sawe the black gowne of his office lye full in a puddle —."

The Sexton (as Mr. Tyrwhitt observed) is styled in this stage-direction, in the old copies, the Town-Clerk, "probably from his doing the duty of such an officer." But this error has only happened here; for throughout the scene itself he is described by his proper title. By mistake also in the quarto, and the folio, which

VERG. O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton! <sup>3</sup>

SEXTON. Which be the malefactors?

DOGB. Marry, that am I and my partner.

VERG. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

SEXTON. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

DOGB. Yea, marry, let them come before me.— What is your name, friend?

BORA. Borachio.

DOGB. Pray write down — Borachio. — Yours, firrah?

CON. I am a gentleman, fir, and my name is Conrade.

DOGB. Write down—master gentleman Conrade. — Masters, do you serve God?

CON. BORA. Yea, fir, we hope.

DOGB. Write down—that they hope they serve God:—and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains! <sup>4</sup> — Masters, it is appears to have been printed from it, the name of Kempe (an actor in our author's theatre) throughout this scene is prefixed to the speeches of Dogberry, and that of Cowley to those of Verges, except in two or three instances, where either Constable or Andrew are substituted for Kempe. MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> O, a stool and a cushion for the Sexton!] Perhaps a ridicule was here aimed at The Spanish Tragedy:

“ Hieron. What, are you ready?

“ Balth. Bring a chaire and a cushion for the king.”

MALONE.

<sup>4</sup> Con. Bora. Yea, fir, we hope.

Dogb. Write down — that they hope they serve God: — and write God first; for God defend but God should go before such villains!] This short passage, which is truly humorous and in character, I have added from the old quarto. Besides, it supplies a defect:

proved already that you are little better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

CON. Marry, sir, we say we are none.

DOGB. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him. — Come you hither, firrah; a word in your ear, sir; I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

BORA. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

DOGB. Well, stand aside.—'Fore God, they are both in a tale: ' Have you writ down — that they are none?

SEXTON. Master constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

DOGB. Yea, marry, that's the esteest way:<sup>6</sup>—Let the watch come forth:—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

for without it, the Town-Clerk asks a question of the prisoners, and goes on without staying for any answer to it. THEOBALD.

The omission of this passage since the edition of 1600, may be accounted for from the stat. 3 Jac. I. c. 21. the sacred name being jestingly used four times in one line. BLACKSTONE.

<sup>5</sup> 'Fore God, they are both in a tale: ] This is an admirable stroke of humour: Dogberry says of the prisoners that they are false knaves; and from that denial of the charge, which one in his wits could not but be supposed to make, he infers a communion of counsels, and records it in the examination as an evidence of their guilt. SIR J. HAWKINS.

If the learned annotator will amend his comment by omitting the word guilt, and inserting the word innocence, it will (except as to the supposed inference of a communication of counsels, which should likewise be omitted or corrected) be a just and pertinent remark. RITSON.

<sup>6</sup> Yea, marry, that's the esteest way: ] Our modern editors, who were at a loss to make out the corrupted reading of the old copies, read easieest. The quarto, in 1600, and the first and second editions in folio,

1 WATCH. This man said, fir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

DOGB. Write down — prince John a villain: — Why this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother — villain.

BORA. Master constable, —

DOGB. Pray thee, fellow, peace; I do not like thy look, I promise thee.

SEXTON. What heard you him say else?

2 WATCH. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

DOGB. Flat burglary, as ever was committed.

VERG. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

SEXTON. What else, fellow?

1 WATCH. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

DOGB. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

SEXTON. What else?

2 WATCH. This is all.

all concur in reading — Yea, marry, that's the esteest way, &c. A letter happened to slip out at press in the first edition; and 'twas too hard a task for the subsequent editors to put it in, or guess at the word under this accidental depravation. There is no doubt but the author wrote, as I have restored the text, — Yea, marry, that's the destest way, i. e. the readiest, most commodious way. The word is pure Saxon. DEAF-LICE, debite, congrue, duely, fitly, GEDÆTHE, opportune, commode, fitly, conveniently, seasonably, in good time, commodiously. Vide Spelman's Saxon Gloss. THEOBALD.

Mr. Theobald might have recollected the word destly in Macbeth:

“Thyself and office destly show.”

Shakspeare, I suppose, designed Dogberry to corrupt this word as well as many others. STEEVENS.

SEXTON. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away; Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and upon the grief of this, suddenly died — Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's; I will go before, and show him their examination. [Exit.

DOGB. Come, let them be opinion'd.

VERG. Let them be in band.

CON. Off, coxcomb! <sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Verg. Let them be in band.

Con. Off, coxcomb!] The old copies read,

“ Let them be in the hands of coxcomb.” STEEVENS.

Mr. Theobald gives these words to Conrade, and says — But why the Sexton should be so pert upon his brother officers, there seems no reason from any superior qualification in him; or any suspicion he shows of knowing their ignorance. This is strange. The Sexton throughout shows as good sense in their examination as any judge upon the bench could do. And as to his suspicion of their ignorance, he tells the Town-Clerk, That he goes not the way to examine. The meanness of his name hindered our editor from seeing the goodness of his sense. But this Sexton was an ecclesiastic of one of the inferior orders called the sacristan, and not a brother officer, as the editor calls him. I suppose the book from whence the poet took his subject, was some old English novel translated from the Italian, where the word sagristano was rendered sexton. As in Fairfax's Godfrey of Boulogne:

“ When Phœbus next unclos'd his wakeful eye,

“ Up rose the Sexton of that place prophane.”

The passage then in question is to be read thus:

Sexton. Let them be in hand.

[Exit.

Con. Off, coxcomb!

Dogberry would have them pinion'd. The Sexton says, it was sufficient if they were kept in safe custody, and then goes out. When one of the watchmen comes up to bind them, Conrade says, Off, coxcomb! as he says afterwards to the constable, Away! you are an afs. — But the editor adds, The old quarto gave me the first umbrage for placing it to Conrade. What these words mean I don't know: but I suspect the old quarto divides the passage as I have done. WARBURTON.

Theobald has fairly given the reading of the quarto.

DOGB. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down—the prince's officer, coxcomb.—Come, bind them: — Thou naughty varlet!

CON. Away! you are an afs, you are an afs.

DOGB. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years? — O that he were here to write

Dr. Warburton's assertion, as to the dignity of a sexton or sacristan, may be supported by the following passage in Stanyhurst's Version of the fourth Book of the Æneid, where he calls the Massylian priestesses:

“ — in soil Massyla begotten,

“ Sexton of Hesperides sinagog.” STEEVENS.

Let them be in hand.] I had conjectured that these words should be given to Verges, and read thus — Let them bind their hands. I am still of opinion that the passage belongs to Verges; but, for the true reading of it, I should wish to adopt a much neater emendation, which has since been suggested to me in conversation by Mr. Steevens — Let them be in band. Shakspeare, as he observed to me, commonly uses band for bond. TYRWHITT.

It is plain that they were bound from a subsequent speech of Pedro: “Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer?” STEEVENS.

Off, coxcomb!] The old copies read — of, and these words make a part of the last speech, “Let them be in the hands of coxcomb.” The present regulation was made by Dr. Warburton, and has been adopted by the subsequent editors. Off was formerly spelt of. In the early editions of these plays a broken sentence (like that before us, — Let them be in the hands —) is almost always corrupted by being tacked, through the ignorance of the transcriber or printer, to the subsequent words. So, in Coriolanus, instead of

“You shames of Rome! you herd of — Boils and plagues

“Plaister you o'er!”

we have in the folio, 1623, and the subsequent copies,

“You shames of Rome, you! Herd of boils and plagues,” &c.

See also Measure for Measure.

Perhaps, however, we should read and regulate the passage thus:

Ver. Let them be in the hands of [the law, he might have intended to say.]

Con. Coxcomb! MALONE.

There is nothing in the old quarto different in this scene from the common copies, except that the names of two actors, Kempe and Cowley, are placed at the beginning of the speeches, instead of the proper words. JOHNSON.

me down—an afs!—but, masters, remember, that I am an afs; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an afs:—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had losses; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him:—Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down—an afs!

ACT V. SCENE I.

Before LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO and ANTONIO.

ANT. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And 'tis not wisdom, thus to second grief
Against yourself.

LEON. I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve: give not me counsel;
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine.
Bring me a father, that so lov'd his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine,
And bid him speak of patience;<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> And bid him speak of patience; ] Read —

“And bid him speak to me of patience.” RITSON.

Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
 And let it answer every strain for strain;
 As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
 In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
 If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard;
 Cry—sorrow, wag! and hem, when he should groan;<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Cry — sorrow, wag! and hem, when he should groan; ] The quarto 1600 and folio 1623, read —

“ And sorrow, wagge, cry hem,” &c.

Mr. Rowe and Mr. Pope —

“ And hallow, wag,” &c.

Mr. Theobald —

“ And sorrow wage,” &c.

Sir Tho. Hanmer and Dr. Warburton —

“ And sorrow waive,” &c.

Mr. Tyrwhitt —

“ And sorrow gagge,” &c.

Mr. Heath and Mr. T. Warton —

“ And sorrowing cry hem,” &c.

I had inadvertently offered —

“ And, sorry wag!” &c.

Mr. Ritson —

“ And sorrow waggery,” &c.

Mr. Malone —

“ In sorrow wag,” &c.

But I am persuaded that Dr. Johnson's explanation as well as arrangement of the original words, is apposite and just: “ I cannot (says he) but think the true meaning nearer than it is imagined.

If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard,

And, sorrow, wag! cry; hem, when he should groan, &c.

That is, ‘ If he will smile, and cry sorrow be gone! and hem instead of groaning.’ The order in which and and cry are placed, is harsh, and this harshness made the sense mistaken. Range the words in the common order, and my reading will be free from all difficulty.

If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard,

Cry, sorrow, wag! and hem when he should groan —”

Thus far Dr. Johnson; and in my opinion he has left succeeding criticks nothing to do respecting the passage before us. Let me, however, claim the honour of supporting his opinion.

To cry — Care away! was once an expression of triumph. So, in Acolastus, a comedy, 1540: “ I may now say, Care away!”

Patch grief with proverbs; make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters; <sup>2</sup> bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience.

Again, ibidem: "—— Now grievous sorrowe and care away!"

Again, at the conclusion of Barnaby Googe's third Eglog:

"Som chestnuts have I there in store,
" With cheese and pleasaunt whaye;
" God sends me vittayles for my nede,
" And I synge Care awaye!"

Again, as Dr. Farmer observes to me, in George Withers's Philarete, 1622:

"Why should we grieve or pine at that?
" Hang sorrow! care will kill a cat.

Sorrow go by! is also (as I am assured) a common exclamation of hilarity even at this time in Scotland. Sorrow wag! might have been just such another. The verb, to wag, is several times used by our author in the sense of to go, or pac off.

The Prince, in the First Part of King Henry IV. Act II. sc. iv. says — "They cry hem! and bid you play it off." And Mr. M. Mason observes that this expression also occurs in As you like it, where Rosalind says — "These burs are in my heart;" and Celia replies — "Hem them away." The foregoing examples sufficiently prove the exclamation hem, to have been of a comic turn.

STEEVENS.

With candle-wasters; ] This may mean, either wash away his sorrow among those who sit up all night to drink, and in that sense may be styled wasters of candles; or overpower his misfortunes by swallowing flap-dragons in his glass, which are described by Falstaff as made of candles' ends. STEEVENS.

This is a very difficult passage, and hath not, I think, been satisfactorily cleared up. The explanation I shall offer, will give, I believe, as little satisfaction; but I will, however, venture it. Candle-wasters is a term of contempt for scholars: thus Jonson, in Cynthia's Revels, Act III. sc. ii: "—— spoiled by a whoreson book-worm, a candle-waster." In The Antiquary, Act III. is a like term of ridicule: "He should more catch your delicate courtier ear, than all your head-scratchers, thumb-biters, lamp-wasters of them all." The sense then, which I would assign to Shakspeare, is this: "If such a one will patch grief with proverbs, — case or cover the wounds of his grief with proverbial sayings; — make misfortune drunk with candle-wasters, — stupidify misfortune, or render himself insensible to the strokes of it, by the conversation or lucubrations of scholars; the production of the lamp, but not fitted to

But there is no such man: For, brother, men
 Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
 Which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it,
 Their counsel turns to passion, which before
 Would give preceptual medicine to rage,
 Fetter strong madnefs in a filken thread,
 Charm ach with air, and agony with words:
 No, no; 'tis all men's office to speak patience
 To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
 But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
 To be so moral, when he shall endure
 The like himself: therefore give me no counsel:
 My griefs cry louder than advertisement.<sup>3</sup>

ANT. Therein do men from children nothing differ.

LEON. I pray thee, peace; I will be flesh and blood;
 For there was never yet philosopher,
 That could endure the tooth-ach patiently;
 However they have writ the style of gods,<sup>4</sup>

human nature." Patch, in the sense of mending a defect or breach, occurs in Hamlet, Act V. sc. i:

"O, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
 Should patch a wall, to expel the winter's flaw."

<sup>4</sup> However they have writ the style of gods, ] This alludes to the extravagant titles the Stoics gave their wise men. Sapiens ille cum Diis, ex pari, vivit. Senec. Ep. 59. Jupiter quo antecedit virum bonum? diutius bonus est. Sapiens nihilo se minoris aestimat. — Deus non vincit sapientem felicitate. Ep. 73. WARBURTON.

Shakspeare might have used this expression, without any acquaintance with the hyperboles of stoicism. By the style of gods, he meant an exalted language; such as we may suppose would be written by beings superior to human calamities, and therefore regarding them with neglect and coldness.

Beaumont and Fletcher have the same expression in the first of their Four Plays in One:

"Athens doth make women philosophers,
 "And sure their children chat the talk of gods." STEEVENS.

And made a pish at chance and sufferance.<sup>5</sup>

ANT. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself;
Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.

LEON. There thou speak'st reason: nay, I will do so:

My soul doth tell me, Hero is bely'd;
And that shall Claudio know, so shall the prince,
And all of them, that thus dishonour her.

Enter Don PEDRO and CLAUDIO.

ANT. Here comes the prince, and Claudio, hastily.

D. PEDRO. Good den, good den.

CLAUD. Good day to both of you.

LEON. Hear you, my lords, —

D. PEDRO. We have some haste, Leonato.

LEON. Some haste, my lord! — well, fare you well,

Are you so hasty now? — well, all is one.

D. PEDRO. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good

ANT. If he could right himself with quarreling,
Some of us would lie low.

CLAUD. Who wrongs him?

apathy. WARBURTON.

The old copies read — push. Corrected by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

<sup>6</sup> Thou, thou — ] I have repeated the word — thou, for the sake of measure. STEEVENS.

CLAUD. Marry, beshrew my hand,
If it should give your age such cause of fear:
In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

LEON. Tush, tush, man, never fleer and jest at me:

I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool;
As, under privilege of age, to brag
What I have done being young, or what would do,
Were I not old: Know, Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong'd mine innocent child and me,
That I am forc'd to lay my reverence by;
And, with grey hairs, and bruise of many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast bely'd mine innocent child;
Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,

And she lyes buried with her ancestors:
O! in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of her's, fram'd by thy villainy.

CLAUD. My villainy!

LEON. Thine, Claudio; thine I say.

D. PEDRO. You say not right, old man.

LEON. My lord, my lord,
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despite his nice fence,<sup>5</sup> and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lustyhood.

CLAUD. Away, I will not have to do with you.

LEON. Canst thou so daff me?<sup>6</sup> Thou hast kill'd my child;

If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

<sup>5</sup> Despite his nice fence, ] i. e. defence, or skill in the science of fencing, or defence. DOUCE.

<sup>6</sup> Can'st thou so daff me? ] This is a country word, Mr. Pope tells us, signifying, daunt. It may be so; but that is not the exposition here: To daff and doff are synonymous terms, that

ANT. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:<sup>7</sup>

 Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

LEON. Brother, —

ANT. Content yourself: God knows, I lov'd my niece;

mean to put off: which is the very sense required here, and what Leonato would reply, upon Claudio's saying, he would have nothing to do with him. THEOBALD.

Theobald has well interpreted the word. Shakspeare uses it more than once. Thus, in K. Henry IV. P. I:

“ The nimble-footed mad-cap Prince of Wales,
 “ And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside.”

Again, in the comedy before us:

“ I would have daff'd all other respects,” &c.

Again, in The Lover's Complaint:

“ There my white stole of chastity I daff'd.”

It is, perhaps, of Scottish origin, as I find it in Ane verie excellent and delectabill Treatise intitult PHILOTUS, &c. Edinburgh, 1603:

“ Their daffing does us so undo.” STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> Ant. He shall kill two of us, &c.] This brother Antony is the truest picture imaginable of human nature. He had assumed the character of a sage to comfort his brother, overwhelmed with grief for his only daughter's affront and dishonour; and had severely reproved him for not commanding his passion better on so trying an occasion. Yet, immediately after this, no sooner does he begin to suspect that his age and valour are slighted, but he falls into the most intemperate fit of rage himself: and all he can do or say is not of power to pacify him. This is copying nature with a penetration and exactness of judgement peculiar to Shakspeare. As to the expression, too, of his passion, nothing can be more highly painted. WARBURTON.

<sup>8</sup> — come boy, follow me: ] Here the old copies destroy the measure by reading —

“ — come, sir boy, come, follow me: ”

I have omitted the unnecessary words. STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> — foining fence; ] Foining is a term in fencing, and means thrusting. DOUCE.

And she is dead, slander'd to death by villains;
That dare as well answer a man, indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue:
Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milkops! —

LEON. Brother Antony, —

ANT. Hold you content; What, man! I know them, yea,

And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:
Scambling,<sup>2</sup> out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave and slander,
Go antickly, and show outward hideousness,<sup>3</sup>
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst,
And this is all.

LEON. But, brother Antony, —

ANT. Come, 'tis no matter;
Do not you meddle, let me deal in this.

D. PEDRO. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience,<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Scambling,] i. e. scrambling. The word is more than once used by Shakspeare. See Dr. Percy's note on the first speech of the play of K. Henry V. and likewise the Scots proverb, "It is well ken'd your father's son was never a scambler." A scambler in its literal sense, is one who goes about among his friends to get a dinner, by the Irish called a cosherer. STEEVENS.

<sup>3</sup> — show outward hideousness,] i. e. what in King Henry V. A& III. sc. vi. is called —

" — a horrid suit of the camp." STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> — we will not wake your patience.] This conveys a sentiment that the speaker would by no means have implied, — That the patience of the two old men was not exercised, but asleep, which upbraids them for insensibility under their wrong. Shakspeare must have wrote:

— we will not wrack —

i. e. destroy your patience by tantalizing you. WARBURTON.

This emendation is very specious, and perhaps is right; yet the present reading may admit a congruous meaning with less difficulty than many other of Shakspeare's expressions.

My heart is sorry for your daughter's death;
But, on my honour, she was charg'd with nothing
But what was true, and very full of proof.

LEON. My lord, my lord, —

D. PEDRO. I will not hear you.

LEON. No?

Brother, away: <sup>5</sup> — I will be heard; —

ANT. And shall,

Or some of us will smart for it.

[Exeunt LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Enter BENEDICK.

D. PEDRO. See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

CLAUD. Now, signior! what news!

BENE. Good day, my lord.

D. PEDRO. Welcome, signior: You are almost come to part almost <sup>6</sup> a fray.

The old men have been both very angry and outrageous; the prince tells them that he and Claudio will not wake their patience; will not any longer force them to endure the presence of those whom, though they look on them as enemies, they cannot resist.

JOHNSON.

Wake, I believe, is the original word. The ferocity of wild beasts is overcome by not suffering them to sleep. We will not wake your patience, therefore means, we will forbear any further provocation. HENLEY.

The same phrase occurs in Othello:

“Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,

“Than answer my wak'd wrath.” STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> Brother, away: —] The old copies, without regard to metre, read —

Come, brother, away, &c.

I have omitted the useless and redundant word — come. STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — to part almost —] This second almost appears like a casual insertion of the compositor. As the sense is complete without it,
I wish the omission of it had been licensed by either of the ancient copies. STEEVENS.

CLAUD. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. PEDRO. Leonato and his brother; What think'st thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

BENE. In a false quarrel there is no true valour. I came to seek you both.

CLAUD. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away: Wilt thou use thy wit?

BENE. It is in my scabbard; Shall I draw it?

D. PEDRO. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

CLAUD. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. — I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; <sup>5</sup> draw, to pleasure us.

D. PEDRO. As I am an honest man, he looks pale: — Art thou sick, or angry?

CLAUD. What! courage, man! What though care kill'd a cat, <sup>6</sup> thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

BENE. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me: — I pray you, choose another subject.

CLAUD. Nay, then give him another staff; this last was broke cross. <sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels;] An allusion perhaps to the itinerant sword-dancers. In what low estimation minstrels were held in the reign of Elizabeth, may be seen from Stat. Eliz. 39. C. iv. and the term was probably used to denote any sort of vagabonds who amused the people at particular seasons.

DOUCE.

<sup>7</sup> Nay, then give him another staff; &c.] An allusion to tilting. See note, As you Like it, A& III. sc. iv. WARBURTON.

D. PEDRO. By this light, he changes more and more; I think, he be angry indeed.

CLAUD. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.<sup>8</sup>

BENE. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

CLAUD. God blefs me from a challenge!

BENE. You are a villain; — I jest not: — I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare: — Do me right,<sup>9</sup> or I will protest your cowardice. You have kill'd a sweet lady, <sup>8</sup> — to turn his girdle.] We have a proverbial speech, If he be angry, let him turn the buckle of his girdle. But I do not know its original or meaning. JOHNSON.

A corresponding expression is to this day used in Ireland — If he be angry, let him tie up his brogues. Neither proverb, I believe, has any other meaning than this: If he is in a bad humour, let him employ himself till he is in a better.

Dr. Farmer furnishes me with an instance of this proverbial expression as used by Claudio, from Winwood's Memorials, fol. edit. 1725. Vol. I. p. 453. See letter from Winwood to Cecyll, from Paris, 1602. about an affront he received there from an Englishman: "I said what I spake was not to make him angry. He replied, if I were angry, I might turn the buckle of my girdle behind me." So likewise. Cowley On the Government of Oliver Cromwell: "—— The next month he swears by the living God, that he will turn them out of doors, and he does so in his princely way of threatening, bidding them turne the buckles of their girdles behind them." STEEVENS.

Again, in Knavery in all Trades, or the Coffee House, 1664. sign. E: "Nay, if the gentleman be angry, let him turn the buckles of his girdle behind him." REED.

Large belts were worn with the buckle before, but for wrestling the buckle was turned behind, to give the adversary a fairer grasp at the girdle. To turn the buckle behind, therefore, was a challenge.

HOLT WHITE.

<sup>9</sup> Do me right,] This phrase occurs in Justice Silence's song in King Henry IV. P. II. Act V. sc. iii. and was the usual form of challenge to pledge a bumper toast in a bumper. See note on the foregoing passage. STEEVENS.

and her death shall fall heavy on you: Let me hear from you.

CLAUD. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. PEDRO. What, a feast? a feast?

CLAUD. I'faith, I thank him; he hath bid<sup>9</sup> me to a calf's-head and a capon; the which if I do not carve most curiously, say, my knife's naught—Shall I not find a woodcock too?<sup>2</sup>

BENE. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. PEDRO. I'll tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit the other day: I said, thou hadst a fine wit; True, says she, a fine little one: No, said I, a great wit; Right, says she, a great gross one: Nay, said I, a good wit; Just, said she, it hurts no body: Nay, said I, the gentleman is wise; Certain, said she, a wise gentleman:<sup>3</sup> Nay, said I, he hath the tongues; That I believe, said she, for he swore a thing to me on Monday

<sup>9</sup> — bid —] i. e. invited. So, in Titus Andronicus, Act I. sc. ii.

“ I am not bid to wait upon this bride.” — REED.

<sup>2</sup> Shall I not find a woodcock too?] A woodcock, being supposed to have no brains, was a proverbial term for a foolish fellow. See The London Prodigal, 1605. and other comedies. MALONE.

A woodcock, means one caught in a springe; alluding to the plot against Benedick. So, in Hamlet, sc. ult.

“ Why, as a woodcock to my own springe, Ofrick.”

Again, in Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV. sc. iii. Biron says — “ four woodcocks in a dish.” DOUCE.

<sup>3</sup> — a wise gentleman:] This jest depending on the colloquial use of words is now obscure, perhaps we should read — a wise gentleman, or, a man wise enough to be a coward. Perhaps wise gentleman was in that age used ironically, and always stood for filly fellow. JOHNSON.

We still ludicrously call a man deficient in understanding — a wise-acre. STEEVENS.

night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue, there's two tongues. Thus did she, an hour together, transshape thy particular virtues; yet, at last, she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.

CLAUD. For the which she wept heartily, and said, she cared not.

D. PEDRO. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.

CLAUD. All, all; and moreover, God saw him when he was hid in the garden.

D. PEDRO. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?

CLAUD. Yea, and text underneath, Here dwells Benedick the married man?

BENE. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind; I will leave you now to your gossip-like humour: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not. — My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you: I must discontinue your company: your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, kill'd a sweet and innocent lady: For my lord Lack-beard, there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.

[Exit BENEDICK.]

D. PEDRO. He is in earnest.

CLAUD. In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

D. PEDRO. And hath challeng'd thee?

CLAUD. Most sincerely.

D. PEDRO. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit! <sup>4</sup>

Enter DOGBERRY, VERGES, and the Watch, with CONRADE and BORACHIO.

CLAUD. He is then a giant to an ape: but then is an ape a doctor to such a man.

D. PEDRO. But, soft you, let be; <sup>5</sup> pluck up, my <sup>4</sup> What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!] It was esteemed a mark of levity and want of becoming gravity, at that time, to go in the doublet and hose, and leave off the cloak, to which this well-turned expression alludes. The thought is, that love makes a man as ridiculous, and exposes him as naked as being in the doublet and hose without a cloak. WARBURTON.

I doubt much concerning this interpretation, yet am by no means confident that my own is right. I believe, however, these words refer to what Don Pedro had said just before — “And hath challenged thee?” — and that the meaning is, What a pretty thing a man is, when he is silly enough to throw off his cloak, and go in his doublet and hose, to fight for a woman? In The Merry Wives of Windsor, when Sir Hugh is going to engage with Dr. Caius, he walks about in his doublet and hose: “Page. And youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day!” — “—— There is reasons and causes for it,” says Sir Hugh, alluding to the duel he was going to fight. — I am aware that there was a particular species of single combat called Rapier and cloak; but I suppose, nevertheless, that when the small sword came into common use, the cloak was generally laid aside in duels, as tending to embarrass the combatants. MALONE.

Perhaps the whole meaning of the passage is this: — What an inconsistent fool is man, when he covers his body with clothes, and at the same time divests himself of his understanding!

STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> But, soft you, let be;] The quarto and first folio read corruptly — let me be, which the editor of the second folio, in order to obtain some sense, converted to — let me see. I was once idle enough to suppose that copy was of some authority; but a minute examination of it has shewn me that all the alterations made in it heart, and be sad! <sup>6</sup> Did he not say, my brother was fled?

DOGB. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance: <sup>7</sup> nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be look'd to.

D. PEDRO. How now, two of my brother's men bound! Borachio, one!

CLAUD. Hearken after their offence, my lord!

D. PEDRO. Officers, what offence have these men done?

DOGB. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are flanders; sixth and lastly, they have bely'd a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things: and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. PEDRO. First, I ask thee what they have done; thirdly, I ask thee what's their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

were merely arbitrary, and generally very injudicious. Let be were without doubt the author's words. The same expression occurs again in Antony and Cleopatra, A& IV. sc. iv.

"What's this for? Ah, let be, let be." MALONE.

If let be, is the true reading, it must mean, let things remain as they are. I have heard the phrase used by Dr. Johnson himself. Mr. Henley observes, that the same expression occurs in St. Matt. xxvii. 49. STEEVENS.

So, in Henry VIII. A& I. sc. i.

"—— and they were ratify'd,

"As he cried, Thus, let be."

Again, in The Winter's Tale, A& V. sc. iii. Leontes says, "Let be, let be." REED.

<sup>6</sup> —— pluck up, my heart, and be sad!] i. e. rouse thyself, my heart, and be prepared for serious consequences! STEEVENS.

CLAUD. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.<sup>8</sup>

D. PEDRO. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: What's your offence?

BORA. Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wisdoms could not discover, these shallow fools have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how Don John your brother incensed me to slander<sup>9</sup> the lady Hero; how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her: my villainy they have upon record; which I had rather seal with my death, than repeat over to my shame: the lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusation; and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villain.

D. PEDRO. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

CLAUD. I have drunk poison, whiles he utter'd it.

D. PEDRO. But did my brother set thee on to this?

BORA. Yea, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

<sup>8</sup> — one meaning well suited.] That is, one meaning is put into many different dresses; the prince having asked the same question in four modes of speech. JOHNSON.

<sup>9</sup> — incens'd me to slander, &c.] That is, incited me. The word is used in the same sense in Richard III. and Henry VIII.

M. MASON.

See Minshew's Dict. in v. MALONE.

D. PEDRO. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery: —

And fled he is upon this villainy.

CLAUD. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear

In the rare semblance that I lov'd it first.

DOGB. Come, bring away the plaintiffs; by this time our Sexton hath reform'd signior Leonato of the matter: And masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

VERG. Here, here comes master signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Re-enter LEONATO and ANTONIO, with the Sexton.

LEON. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes; That when I note another man like him, I may avoid him: Which of these is he?

BORA. If you would know your wronger, look on me.

LEON. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast kill'd Mine innocent child?

BORA. Yea, even I alone.

LEON. No, not so, villain; thou bely'st thyself; Here stand a pair of honourable men, A third is fled, that had a hand in it: — I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death; Record it with your high and worthy deeds; 'Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it.

CLAUD. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak: Choose your revenge yourself;

Impose me to what penance<sup>2</sup> your invention
Can lay upon my sin: yet sinn'd I not,
But in mistaking.

D. PEDRO. By my soul, nor I;
And yet, to satisfy this good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to.

LEON. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live,
That were impossible; but, I pray you both,
Possess the people<sup>3</sup> in Messina here
How innocent she died: and, if your love
Can labour aught in sad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing it to her bones; sing it to night: —
To-morrow morning come you to my house;
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter,
Almost the copy of my child that's dead,
And she alone is heir to both of us;<sup>4</sup>
Give her the right you should have given her cousin,
And so dies my revenge.

CLAUD. O, noble sir,

<sup>2</sup> Impose me to what penance —] i. e. command me to undergo whatever penance, &c. A task or exercise prescribed by way of punishment for a fault committed at the Universities, is yet called (as Mr. Steevens has observed in a former note) an imposition.

MALONE.

<sup>3</sup> Possess the people, &c.] To possess, in ancient language, signifies. to inform, to make acquainted with. So, in The Merchant of Venice:

“Is he yet possess'd how much you would?”
Again, ibid:

“I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose.”

STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> And she alone is heir to both of us;] Shakspeare seems to have forgot what he had made Leonato say, in the fifth scene of the first Act to Antonio, “How now, brother; where is my cousin your son? hath he provided the musick?” ANONYMOUS.

Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me!
I do embrace your offer; and dispose
For henceforth of poor Claudio.

LEON. To-morrow then I will expect your coming;

To-night I take my leave. — This naughty man
Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who, I believe, was pack'd in all this wrong,<sup>5</sup>
Hir'd to it by your brother.

BORA. No, by my soul, she was not;
Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me;
But always hath been just and virtuous,
In any thing that I do know by her.

DOGB. Moreover, fir, (which, indeed, is not under white and black,) this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his punishment: And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it;<sup>6</sup> and

<sup>5</sup> Who, I believe, was pack'd in all this wrong,] i. e. combined; an accomplice. So, in Lord Bacon's Works, Vol. IV. p. 269.
edit. 1740. "If the issue shall be this, that whatever shall be done for him, shall be thought done for a number of persons that shall be laboured and packed —." MALONE.

So, in King Lear:

" — snuffs and packings of the dukes." STEEVENS.

Again, in Melville's Memoirs, p. 90. " — he was a special instrument of helping my Lord of Murray and Secretary Lidington to pack up the first friendship betwixt the two queens," &c.

REED.

<sup>6</sup> — he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it;
There could not be a pleasanter ridicule on the fashion, than the constable's descant on his own blunder. They heard the conspirators satirize the fashion; whom they took to be a man surnamed Deformed. This the constable applies with exquisite humour to the courtiers, in a description of one of the most fantastical fashions of that time, the men's wearing rings in their ears, and indulging a favourite lock of hair which was brought borrow money in God's name;<sup>7</sup> the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake: Pray you, examine him upon that point.

LEON. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

DOGB. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth; and I praise God for you.

before, and tied with ribbons, and called a love-lock. Against this fashion William Prynne wrote his treatise, called, The Unlovelyness of Love-Locks. To this fantastick mode Fletcher alludes in his Cupid's Revenge: "This morning I brought him a new perriwig with a lock at it — And yonder's a fellow come has bored a hole in his ear." And again, in his Woman-Hater: "— If I could endure an ear with a hole in it, or a platted lock," &c.

WARBURTON.

Dr. Warburton, I believe, has here (as he frequently does,) refined a little too much. There is no allusion, I conceive, to the fashion of wearing rings in the ears (a fashion which our author himself followed). The pleasantry seems to consist in Dogberry's supposing that the lock which DEFORMED wore, must have a key to it.

Fynes Moryson in a very particular account that he has given of the dress of Lord Montjoy, (the rival, and afterwards the friend of Robert, Earl of Essex,) says, that his hair was "thinne on the head, where he wore it short, except a lock under his left eare, which he nourished the time of this warre, [the Irish War, in 1599.] and being woven up, hid it in his neck under his ruffe." ITINERARY, P. II. p. 45. When he was not on service, he probably wore it in a different fashion. The portrait of Sir Edward Sackville, Earl of Dorset, painted by Vandyck, (now at Knowle,) exhibits this lock with a large knotted ribband at the end of it. It hangs under the ear on the left side, and reaches as low as where the star is now worn by the knights of the garter.

The same fashion is alluded to in an epigram already quoted:

"Or what he doth with such a horse-tail-lock," &c.

MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> — and borrows money in God's name;] i. e. is a common beggar. This alludes, with too much levity, to the 17th verse of the sixth chapter of Proverbs: "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth unto the Lord." STEEVENS.

LEON. There's for thy pains.

DOGB. God save the foundation! <sup>9</sup>

LEON. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

DOGB. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship; I wish your worship well; God restore you to health: I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wish'd, God prohibit it. — Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt DOGBERRY, VERGES, and Watch.]

LEON. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

ANT. Farewell, my lords; we look for you to-morrow.

D. PEDRO. We will not fail.

CLAUD. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

[Exeunt D. PEDRO and CLAUDIO.]

LEON. Bring you these fellows on; we'll talk with Margaret,

How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow. <sup>2</sup>

[Exeunt.]

<sup>9</sup> God save the foundation!] Such was the customary phrase employed by those who received alms at the gates of religious houses. Dogberry, however, in the present instance, might have designed to say — “God save the founder!” STEEVENS.

<sup>2</sup> — lewd fellow.] Lewd, in this, and several other instances, has not its common meaning, but merely signifies — idle. So, in King Richard III. A& I. sc. iii.

“But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.”

STEEVENS.

S C E N E I I.

LEONATO'S Garden.Enter BENEDICK and MARGARET, meeting.

BENE. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

MARG. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

BENE. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

MARG. To have no man come over me? why, shall I always keep below stairs?'

BENE. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth, it catches.

<sup>3</sup> To have no man come over me? why, shall I always keep below stairs?] I suppose, every reader will find the meaning.

JOHNSON.

Left he should not, the following instance from Sir Aston's Cockayne's Poems is at his service :

" But to prove rather he was not beguil'd,

" Her he o'er-came, for he got her with child."

And another, more apposite, from Marston's Infatiate Countess, 1613.

" Alas! when we are once o'the falling hand,

" A man may easily come over us." COLLINS.

Mr. Theobald, to procure an obvious sense, would read — above stairs. But there is danger in any attempt to reform a joke two hundred years old.

The sense, however, for which Mr. Theobald contends, may be restored by supposing the loss of a word; and that our author wrote — "Why, shall I always keep men below stairs?" i. e. never suffer them to come up into my bed-chamber, for the purposes of love. STEEVENS.

MARG. And your's as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

BENE. A most manly wit, Margaret, it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.<sup>4</sup>

MARG. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

BENE. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

MARG. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs. [Exit MARGARET.

BENE. And therefore will come.

The god of love, [Singing.]
That sits above,<sup>5</sup>
And knows me, and knows me,
How pitiful I deserve, —

<sup>4</sup> — I give thee the bucklers.] I suppose that to give the bucklers is, to yield, or to lay by all thoughts of defence, so clypeum abjicere. The rest deserves no comment. JOHNSON.

Greene, in his Second Part of Coney-Catching, 1592. uses the same expression: "At this his master laught, and was glad, for further advantage, to yield the bucklers to his prentise."

Again, in A Woman never Vex'd, a comedy by Rowley, 1632. "into whose hands she thrusts the weapons first, let him take up the bucklers."

Again, in Decker's Satiromastix:

"Charge one of them to take up the bucklers against that hair-monger Horace."

Again, in Chapman's May-day, 1611.

"And now I lay the bucklers at your feet."

Again, in Every Woman in her Humour, 1609.

"—if you lay down the bucklers, you lose the victory."

Again, in P. Holland's translation of Pliny's Natural History, B. X. Ch. xxi. "—it goeth against his stomach (the cock's) to yeeld the gantlet and give the bucklers." STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> The god of love, &c.] This was the beginning of an old song,

I mean, in finging; but in loving, — Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of pandars, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turn'd over and over as my poor self, in love: Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have try'd; I can find out no rhyme to lady but baby, an innocent rhyme; for scorn, horn, a hard rhyme; for school, fool, a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings: No, I was not born under a rhiming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.<sup>6</sup> —

Enter BEATRICE.

Sweet Beatrice, would'st thou come when I called thee?

BEAT. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

BENE. O, stay but till then!

BEAT. Then, is spoken; fare you well now:—and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for,<sup>7</sup> which by W. E. (William Elderton) a puritanical parody of which, by one W. Birch, under the title of The complaint of a Sinner, &c. Imprinted at London, by Alexander Lacy for Richard Applow, is still extant. The words in this moralised copy are as follows:

“ The god of love, that sits above,
 “ Doth know us, doth know us,
 “ How sinful that we be.” RITSON.

In Bacchus' Bountie, &c. 4to. bl. l. 1593, is a song, beginning —

“ The Gods of love
 “ Which raigue above.” STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> — in festival terms.] i. e. in splendid phraseology, such as differs from common language, as holidays from common days. Thus, Hotspur, in K. Henry IV. p. 1.

“ With many holiday and lady terms.” STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> — with that I came for,] For, which is wanting in the old copy, was inserted by Mr. Rowe. MALONE.

is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

BENE. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kifs thee.

BEAT. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkifs'd.

BENE. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sence, so forcible is thy wit: But, I must tell thee plainly. Claudio undergoes my challenge;<sup>8</sup> and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

BEAT. For them all together; which maintain'd so politick a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

BENE. Suffer love; a good epithet! I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

BEAT. In spite of your heart, I think; alas! poor heart! If you spite it for my sake, I will spite it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

BENE. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

BEAT. It appears not in this confession: there's not one wise man among twenty, that will praise himself.

BENE. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that

<sup>8</sup> ——— undergoes my challenge; i. e. is subject to it. So, in Cymbeline, Act III. sc. v. “——— undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee.” STEEVENS.

lived in the time of good neighbours: <sup>9</sup> if a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

BEAT. And how long is that, think you?

BENE. Question? — Why, an hour in clamour, and a quarter in rheum: <sup>2</sup> Therefore it is most expedient for the wife, (if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself: So much for praising myself, (who, I myself will bear witness, is praise-worthy,) and now tell me, How doth your cousin?

BEAT. Very ill.

BENE. And how do you?

BEAT. Very ill too.

BENE. Serve God, love me, and mend: there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter URSULA.

URS. Madam, you must come to your uncle; yonder's old coil at home: <sup>3</sup> it is proved, my lady <sup>9</sup> — in the time of good neighbours:] i. e. when men were not envious, but every one gave another his due. The reply is extremely humorous. WARBURTON.

<sup>2</sup> Question? — Why, an hour, &c.] i. e. What a question's there, or what a foolish question do you ask? But the Oxford editor, not understanding this phrase, contracted into a single word, (of which we have many instances in English) has fairly struck it out. WARBURTON.

The phrase occurs frequently in Shakspeare, and means no more than — you ask a question, or that is the question. RITSON.

<sup>3</sup> — old coil at home:] So, in King Henry IV. P. II. A& II. (c. iv. “By the mass, here will be old Utis.” See note on this

Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone: Will you come presently?

BEAT. Will you go hear this news, signior?

BENE. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

The inside of a Church.

Enter Don PEDRO, CLAUDIO, and Attendants with musick and tapers.

CLAUD. Is this the monument of Leonato?

ATTEN. It is, my lord.

CLAUD. [Reads from a scroll.

*Done to death<sup>4</sup> by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in guerdon<sup>5</sup> of her wrongs, passage. Old, (I know not why) was anciently a common augmentative in familiar language.

Coil is baffle, stir. So, in King John:

"I am not worth this coil that's made for me." STEEVENS.

<sup>4</sup> Done to death—] This obsolete phrase occurs frequently in our ancient writers. Thus, in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion, 1657:

"His mother's hand shall stop thy breath,

"Thinking her own son is done to death." MALONE.

To do to death is merely an old translation of the French phrase — Faire mourir. STEEVENS.

<sup>5</sup> — in guerdon—] Guerdon is reward, remuneration. See Costard's use of this word in Love's Labour's Lost, A<sup>4</sup> III. sc. i. The verb, to guerdon, occurs both in King Henry VI. P. II. and in King Henry VIII. STEEVENS.

*So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.*

*Hang thou there upon the tomb, [affixing it.
Praising her when I am dumb. —*

Now, musick, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

S O N G.

*Pardon, Goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight; <sup>6</sup>*

<sup>6</sup> Those that slew thy virgin knight;] Knight, in its original signification, means follower, or pupil, and in this sense may be feminine. Helena, in All's well that ends well, uses knight in the same signification. JOHNSON.

Virgin knight is virgin hero. In the times of chivalry, a virgin knight was one who had as yet atchieved no adventure. Hero had as yet atchieved no matrimonial one. It may be added, that a virgin knight wore no device on his shield, having no right to any till he had deserved it.

So, in The History of Clyomon, Knight of the Golden Shield, &c. 1599.

“Then as thou seem’st in thy attire a virgin knight to be,

“Take thou this shield likewise of white,” &c.

It appears, however, from several passages in Spenser’s Faerie Queen, B. I. c. vii. that an ideal order of this name was supposed, as a compliment to Queen Elizabeth’s virginity:

“Of doughtie knights whom faery land did raise

“That noble order hight of maidenhed.”

Again, B. II. c. ii.

“Order of maidenhed the most renown’d.”

Again, B. II. c. ix.

“And numbred be mongst knights of maidenhed.”

On the books of the Stationers’ Company in the year 1594. is entered, “——Pheander the mayden knight.” STEEVENS.

I do not believe that any allusion was here intended to Hero’s having yet atchieved “no matrimonial adventure.” Diana’s knight or Virgin knight, was the common poetical appellation of virgins, in Shakespeare’s time.

So, in The Two Noble Kinsmen, 1634.

“O sacred, shadowy, cold and constant queen,

“—— who to thy femal knights

For the which, with songs of woe,
 Round about her tomb they go.
 Midnight, assist our moan;
 Help us to sigh and groan,
 Heavily, heavily:
 Graves, yawn, and yield your dead,
 Till death be uttered,<sup>7</sup>
 Heavily, heavily.

CLAUD. Now, unto thy bones good night!
 Yearly will I do this rite.

D. PEDRO. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out:

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day,

Before the wheels of Phœbus, round about

Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey:

Thanks to you all, and leave us; fare you well.

CLAUD. Good morrow, masters; each his several way.

“Allow’st no more blood than will make a blush,
 “Which is their order’s robe,——.”

Again, more appositely in Spenser’s Faery Queene, B. III. c. xii.

“Soon as that virgin knight he saw in place,
 “His wicked bookes in hast he overthrew.”

MALONE.

This last instance will by no means apply; for the virgin knight is the maiden Britomart, who appeared in the accoutrements of a knight, and from that circumstance was so denominated.

STEEVENS.

<sup>7</sup> Till death be uttered,] I do not profess to understand this line, which to me appears both defective in sense and metre. I suppose two words have been omitted, which perhaps were — “Till songs of death be uttered, &c.

So, in King Richard III:

“Out on you, owls! nothing but songs of death?”

STEEVENS.

D. PEDRO. Come, let us hence, and put on other weeds ;

And then to Leonato's we will go.

CLAUD. And, Hymen, now with luckier issue speed's,

Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe!<sup>s</sup>

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

A Room in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, BENEDICK, BEATRICE, URSULA, Friar, and HERO.

FRIAR. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

LEON. So are the prince and Claudio, who accus'd her,

Upon the error that you heard debated:
But Margaret was in some fault for this;
Although against her will, as it appears
In the true course of all the question.

ANT. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

BENE. And so am I, being else by faith enforc'd
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe!]* The old copy has — speeds. STEEVENS.

Claudio could not know, without being a prophet, that this new proposed match should have any luckier event than that designed with Hero. Certainly, therefore, this should be a wish in Claudio; and, to this end, the poet might have wrote, speed's; i. e. speed us: and so it becomes a prayer to Hymen. THIRLBY.

The contradiction introduced is so extremely harsh, that I doubt whether it was intended by the author. However I have followed former editors in adopting it. MALONE.

LEON. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,
Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves;
And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd:
The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour
To visit me: — You know your office, brother;
You must be father to your brother's daughter,
And give her to young Claudio. [Exeunt Ladies.]

ANT. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

BENE. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

FRIAR. To do what, signior?

BENE. To bind me, or undo me, one of them. —
Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior,
Your niece regards me with an eye of favour.

LEON. That eye my daughter lent her; 'Tis most true.

BENE. And I do with an eye of love requite her.

LEON. The sight whereof, I think, you had from mé,

From Claudio, and the prince; But what's your will?

BENE. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical:
But, for my will, my will is, your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd
In the state of honourable marriage;<sup>9</sup> —
In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

LEON. My heart is with your liking.

FRIAR. And my help.

Here comes the prince, and Claudio.

<sup>9</sup> In the state of honourable marriage;] Marriage, in this instance, is used as a trisyllable. So, in The Taming of the Shrew, A & III. sc. ii.

“ 'Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage.”

STEEVENS.

Enter Don PEDRO and CLAUDIO, with Attendants.

D. PEDRO. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

LEON. Good morrow, prince; good morrow,
Claudio;

We here attend you; Are you yet determin'd
To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?

CLAUD. I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiop.

LEON. Call her forth, brother, here's the friar ready. [Exit ANTONIO.]

D. PEDRO. Good morrow, Benedick: Why, what's the matter,

That you have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?

CLAUD. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull:<sup>2</sup>—

Tush, fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee;<sup>3</sup>

As once Europa did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.

BENE. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low;
And some such strange bull leap'd your father's cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat,
Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.

Re-enter ANTONIO, with the Ladies mask'd.

CLAUD. For this I owe you: here come other reckonings.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?

<sup>3</sup> And all Europa shall, &c.] I have no doubt but that our author wrote —

And all our Europe, &c.

So, in King Richard II:

“As were our England in reversion his.” STEEVENS.

ANT. This same is she,<sup>4</sup> and I do give you her.

CLAUD. Why, then she's mine: Sweet, let me see your face.

LEON. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand

Before this friar, and swear to marry her.

CLAUD. Give me your hand before this holy
friar;

I am your husband, if you like of me.

HERO. And when I liv'd, I was your other wife:
[Unmasking.]

And when you lov'd, you were my other husband.

CLAUD. Another Hero?

HERO. Nothing certainer:

One Hero died defil'd; but I do live,

And, surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. PEDRO. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

LEON. She died, my lord, but whiles her slander
liv'd.

FRIAR. All this amazement can I qualify;
When, after that the holy rites are ended,
I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:
Mean time, let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.

BENE. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?

BEAT. I answer to that name; [Unmasking] What is your will?

BENE. Do not you love me?

<sup>4</sup> Ant. This same, &c.] This speech is in the old copies given to Leonato. Mr. Theobald first assigned it to the right owner. Leonato has in a former part of this scene told Antonio, — that he “must be father to his brother's daughter, and give her to young Claudio.” MALONE.

BEAT. No, no more than reason.<sup>5</sup>

BENE. Why, then your uncle, and the prince,
and Claudio,
Have been deceived; for they swore you did.<sup>6</sup>

BEAT. Do not you love me?

BENE. No, no more than reason.<sup>7</sup>

BEAT. Why, then my cousin, Margaret, and Urfula,
Are much deceiv'd; for they did swear, you did.

BENE. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

BEAT. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

BENE. 'Tis no such matter:—Then, you do not love me?

BEAT. No, truly, but in friendly recompence.

LEON. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

CLAUD. And I'll be sworn upon't, that he loves
her;

For here's a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice.

HERO. And here's another,

<sup>5</sup> No, no more than reason.] The old copies, injuriously to metre, read — Why, no &c. It should seem that the compositor's eye had caught the here unnecessary adverb from the following speech.

STEEVENS.

<sup>6</sup> ——— for they swore you did.] For, which both the sense and metre require, was inserted by Sir Thomas Hanmer. So, below:

“Are much deceiv'd; for they did swear you did.”

MALONE.

<sup>7</sup> No, no more than reason.] Here again the metre, in the old copies, is overloaded by reading — Troth, no, no more, &c.

STEEVENS.

Writ in my cousin's hand, stolen from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

BENE. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts!—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.

BEAT. I would not deny you;—but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion;<sup>6</sup> and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.

BENE. Peace, I will stop your mouth.<sup>7</sup>

[Kissing her.]

D. PEDRO. How dost thou, Benedick the married man?

BENE. I'll tell thee what, prince, a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour:

<sup>6</sup> I would not deny you; &c.] Mr. Theobald says, is not this mock-reasoning? She would not deny him, but that she yields upon great persuasion. In changing the negative, I make no doubt but I have retrieved the poet's humour: and so changes not into yet. But is not this a mock-critic? who could not see that the plain obvious sense of the common reading was this, I cannot find in my heart to deny you, but for all that I yield, after having stood out great persuasions to submission. He had said — I take thee for pity, she replies — I would not deny thee, i. e. I take thee for pity too: but as I live, I am won to this compliance by importunity of friends. Mr. Theobald, by altering not to yet, makes it supposed that he had been importunate, and that she had often denied, which was not the case. WARBURTON.

<sup>7</sup> Bene. Peace, I will stop your mouth. [Kissing her.] In former copies:

Leon. Peace, I will stop your mouth.

What can Leonato mean by this? “Nay, pray, peace, niece! don't keep up this obstinacy of profession, for I have proofs to stop your mouth.” The ingenious Dr. Thirlby agreed with me, that this ought to be given to Benedick, who, upon saying it, kisses Beatrice; and this being done before the whole company, how natural is the reply which the prince makes upon it?

How dost thou, Benedick the married man?

Besides, this mode of speech, preparatory to a salute, is familiar to our poet in common with other stage-writers. THEOBALD.

Dost thou think, I care for a satire, or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, he shall wear nothing handsome about him: In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion. — For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that<sup>8</sup> thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin, CLAUD. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgell'd thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

BENE. Come, come, we are friends:—let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heels.

LEON. We'll have dancing afterwards.

BENE. First, o' my word; therefore, play, musick. —

Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverend than one tipp'd with horn.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> — in that —] i. e. because. So, Hooker: "Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." STEEVENS.

<sup>9</sup> — no staff more reverend than one tipp'd with horn.] This passage may admit of some explanation that I am unable to furnish. By accident I lost several instances I had collected for the purpose of throwing light on it. The following, however, may assist the future commentator.

MS. Sloan, 1691.

"THAT A FELON MAY WAGE BATTAILE, WITH THE ORDER THEREOF.

Enter a Messenger.

And brought with armed men back to Messina.

heades bare, and bare-handed and bare-footed, every one of them having a baston horned at ech ende, of one length," &c.

Again, in Stowe's Chronicle, edit. 1615, p. 669: "—— his baston a staffe of an elle long, made taper-wise, tipt with horne, &c. was borne after him." STEEVENS.

Again, Britton, Pleas of the Crown, c. xxvii. f. 18. "Next let them go to combat armed without iron and without linnen armour, their heads uncovered and their hands naked, and on foot, with two bastons tipped with horn of equal length, and each of them a target of four corners, without any other armour, whereby any of them may annoy the other; and if either of them have any other weapon concealed about him, and therewith annoy his adversary, let it be done as shall be mentioned amongst combats in a plea of land." REED.

Mr. Steevens's explanation is undoubtedly the true one. The allusion is certainly to the ancient trial by wager of battel, in suits both criminal and civil. The quotation above given recites the form in the former case, — viz. an appeal of felony. The practice was nearly similar in civil cases, upon issue joined in a writ of right. Of the last trial of this kind in England, (which was in the thirteenth year of Queen Elizabeth,) our author might have read a particular account in Stowe's Annales. Henry Nailor, master of defence, was champion for the demandants, Simon Low and John Kyme; and George Thorne for the tenant, (or defendant,) Thomas Paramoure. The combat was appointed to be fought in Tuthill-fields, and the Judges of the Common Pleas and Serjeants at law attended. But a compromise was entered into between the parties, the evening before the appointed day, and they only went through the forms, for the greater security of the tenant. Among other ceremonies Stowe mentions, that "the gauntlet that was cast down by George Thorne was borne before the sayd Nailor, in his passage through London, upon a sword's point, and his baston (a staff of an ell long, made taper-wise, tipt with horn,) with his shield of hard leather, was borne after him," &c. See also Minshew's Dict. 1617. in v. Combat; from which it appears that Nailor on this occasion was introduced to the Judges, with "three solemn congees," by a very reverend person, "Sir Jerome Bowes, ambassador from Queen Elizabeth into Russia, who carried a red baston of an ell long, tipped with horne." — In a very ancient law-book entitled Britton, the manner in which the combatants are to be armed is particularly mentioned. The quotation from the Sloanian MS. is a translation from thence. By a ridiculous mistake the words, "fauns loge arme," are rendered in the modern translation of that book, printed a few years ago, "without linnen armour;" and "a mains nues and pies" [bare-handed and bare-footed] is translated, "and their hands naked, and on foot." MALONE.

This play may be justly said to contain two of the most sprightly characters that Shakspeare ever drew. The wit, the humourist, the gentleman, and the soldier, are combined in Benedick. It is to be lamented, indeed, that the first and most splendid of these distinctions, is disgraced by unnecessary profaneness; for the goodness of his heart is hardly sufficient to atone for the licence of his tongue. The too sarcastic levity, which flashes out in the conversation of Beatrice, may be excused on account of the steadiness and friendship so apparent in her behaviour, when she urges her lover to risque his life by a challenge to Claudio. In the conduct of the fable, however, there is an imperfection similar to that which Dr. Johnson has pointed out in The Merry Wives of Windsor: — the second contrivance is less ingenious than the first: — or, to speak more plainly, the same incident is become stale by repetition. I wish some other method had been found to entrap Beatrice, than that very one which before had been successfully practised on Benedick.

Much ado about Nothing, (as I understand from one of Mr. Vertue's MSS.) formerly passed under the title of Benedick and Beatrix. Heming the player received, on the 20th of May, 1613, the sum of forty pounds, and twenty pounds more as his Majesty's gratuity, for exhibiting six plays at Hampton-Court, among which was this comedy.
